Senator La Follette Leading Candidate for President, But Single Taxers Will Not Accept Him.

BIG PARTIES RAPPED IN KEYNOTE SPEECH

Time Ripe for New Deal, Politically, Declares Allen McCurdy—Over 500 Delegates Present.

Chicago, July 10.—Foundation stones for a new party on which to unite all third party movements were laid when the committees of forty-eight and the single tax party joined in their first national convention to draft a platform and pick nominees who, they hope, will win the support of ten or a dozen liberal organizations.

The first day's session, devoted to keynote speeches and organization work, developed as many different views as there were factions represented. Rules, resolutions and nomination for permanent officials were debated step by step and at times acrimoniously. Allen McCurdy, of New York, the temporary chairman, and J. A. H. Kimball, head of the committee of forty-eight, maintained order with difficulty.

Division between the liberal and radical elements was brought out in the rules debate when Swinburne Hale, of New York, said the state delegations were divided 51 per cent liberal and 49 per cent radical. He was pleading for a change in the rules that would prevent the radicals being out-voted by the majority of liberals, but the majority ruled and his plea was lost.

Single-Taxers May Bolt.

Participation of the single-taxers in today's convention followed an earlier session at which they decided to present their platform demands and views on candidates. They are understood to be willing to accept either Charles H. Ingerson, watch manufacturer, or Amos Pinchot, one of the leaders of the committee of forty-eight, for presidential nominee. They are opposed, their leaders say, to accepting Robert M. La Follette, the favorite presidential candidate of the forty-eighers, and may bolt the convention and select their own ticket if La Follette is nominated.

Determination of the single-taxers' course was to be contingent upon three things: first, the platform, which they said, must include a single-tax plank; second, the candidate; and third, the name of the party.

The party name promises to develop a fight. Members of the single tax group want some reference to their name incorporated in the party platform. The labor party of the United States, whose convention gets under way tomorrow, is willing to join the third party movement, and probably will accept La Follette as a candidate but demands that the word "labor" be included in the party designation.

270 Required to Nominate.

As organized today, the committee of 48 convention numbered 53 accredited delegates with a majority of 270 required to nominate. The 53 included, in addition to the forty-eighers and single taxers, fraternal delegates from non-partisan league. Triple alliance of the northwest, Farmers National council, People's Money league, the Producers league, and Consumers league, and several other organizations. The committee of forty-eight embraces a number of well-known liberal leaders, some of whom were prominent in Bull Moose movement of four and eight years ago. The committee was formed last year at St. Louis with a member for each state.

While delegates debated rules and resolutions today their committees continued negotiations with the labor party.

There was small hope that the fusion plans could be completed before tomorrow night following the opening of the session of the labor convention, when John Flanagan, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, will deliver the key note speech for labor. Both conventions expect to be ready Monday to take up and complete in one day's session their platforms, which it is expected, will be almost identical.

There were names, so far as known, to be presented to the labor party for consideration as presidential nominees. Senator La Follette and

TO GIVE FULTON CO.
ONE CONGRESSMAN

Every Indication Points
That Certainly Not More Than Two Counties Will Be Included in District.

NOW REPRESENTS FIVE

After Census Is Completed Congress Will Take Up Question of Reapportionment of Representatives.

By Robert Moran

Following the official announcement of the census figures Saturday showing that Fulton now has a population of 222,696, and that Dekalb has 44,051, the strong probability loomed that Fulton will in the near future have a congressman of her own, and it became certain that the new apportionment will show that the Fulton district will be composed of not more than two counties.

Under the present congressional apportionment, which calls for a congressman for each 200,000 people or less, Fulton would be entitled to one representative.

It is not unlikely that a large portion of this week's efforts may have been directed either to the prevention of destructive work or to the preparation of public send-ment for reforms in the revenue system of the state for which a majority of the representatives is not ready.

His card follows:

"Thinking that yesterday was the last day to register, and feeling so earnestly that some man of considerable influence would offer for my own accord, registered late in the afternoon. On consulting at the first opportunity afterward my friends and I have decided to increase the population necessary to call for a congressman from the present figure to one decidedly higher."

W. O. Foote

Mr. Foote is a well-known business man who for the past thirty years has been a congressman of Fulton county.

Under the next reapportionment of representatives Fulton county will have a congressman of her own in my opinion," declared Secretary of State Guy McLendon Saturday night. Certainly there will not be more than two counties.

"as the ruling was ordered by me solely for their protection and in order that all of the coal dealers of this city would not have to go out of business. The blame lies with the operators at the mines and the acute situation is augmented by the congestion of freight and the shortage of cars for the delivery of the commodity."

"I found, however, that it was simply a choice of two evils: either to advance the price of coal or to leave no coal. Therefore, the movement of coal into Atlanta is, altogether, the yards now being practically empty. I ordered this advance temporarily, with the confident expectation that our mayor and council and the chamber of commerce might immediately take action for quick relief from this intolerable situation."

He says that four of the largest dealers in the city are out of the market altogether, taking no further orders for coal until orders now in hand have been filled and in filling these orders now on hand, the dealers face a probable loss. He points out that other dealers state that they, too, will be compelled to get out of the market unless the price is advanced so that they may operate without substantial loss.

Not only in Atlanta is the coal situation critical, but it is the same in other parts of the state. Griffin reports not one bushel of coal in her yards, Athens is without coal and it is not improbable that many other Georgia cities are facing the same crisis.

Factors in Shortage.
The factors resulting in the shortage of coal on the Atlanta market are summed up by Mr. Austin as an insufficient number of cars for hauling coal from the mines to the different markets, which necessitates the curtailment of the number of working days per week by the employing mines.

The operators claim that the miners work only two days a week and that they are compelled to pay them from $10 to $20 a day, but as this sum includes only days on which they labor, their gross earnings for the week are insufficient for the laborers to live on and the operators are compelled to furnish them with supplies from their commissaries.

The results of Mr. Austin's investigations are that Atlanta dealers are now purchasing their coal in the Tennessee and Kentucky fields, where coal is bought largely through bidding at the mines. According to his figures, they are now paying $9, $9.25 and $9.50 per ton for coal at the mines, while freight, plus war tax, raises this amount $2.11 per ton, and another $1.11 is added by shippers and waste in transit. This makes a total cost to the dealers in their yards, before unloading, from $12.22 to $12.72 ton.

Under the ruling of Commissioner Mangat, the dealer is allowed 30 per cent of the selling price to cover his overhead expenses and his profit. Even with the price at $15.75 a ton, the Atlanta dealers will not, they insist, secure this gross profit allowed by this ruling.

Four Mines Sold.
Another factor vitally affecting the coal situation in Georgia is brought up by Mr. Austin. He announces that four mines, which have been supplying this zone, have been sold to industrialists for their individual use, and that this total supply has been shut off from this state. These mines.

all of which are located in the Harlan field, from which our coal is largely derived, were sold as follows: Dick Branch to Koppers Company, the White Sulphur Gas Company, the Banner Gas Company, the Detroit City Gas Company, the Kinkade Gas Company, and the Michigan Power Company.

Other facts and figures given out by Mr. Austin are that the highest price paid for coal in Atlanta, up to the time of his arrival, was $8.75 a ton and that since the government supervision ended, the prices have gone up, following the following scale: from $8.25 to $11; from $11.50; from $11.50 to $12.50; from $12.50 to $12 and now to $15.75. The city of Atlanta is now paying a minimum of $7.50 to $10.50 a ton, which does not signify the same grade of coal used by consumers in their homes, but an ordinary grade.

Situation Most Acute.

Summing up the situation, Mr. Austin declares it the most acute that Atlanta has ever faced and he predicts that if it is not alleviated it once again will result in a total suffrage to the people of this city. He advises citizens of Atlanta and the state to ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to draw the largest possible number of cars to the mines for getting the coal to the city and to have the government fix the maximum price of the mines.

"Too much thought cannot be given this situation," asserted Mr. Austin, "as it greatly affects the miners, as well as the dealers, and he predicts that if it is not alleviated it once again will result in a total suffrage to the people of this city. He advises citizens of Atlanta and the state to ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to draw the largest possible number of cars to the mines for getting the coal to the city and to have the government fix the maximum price of the mines."

"I planned the whole thing in cold blood because I decided that was the only way I could do it and get away with it," he said. "The thought of killing a person was not so repugnant to me as it might be to most persons because of my experience in my father's butcher shop. A man in a butcher shop gets so closely acquainted with blood that he loses his aversion to it."

"Then in the army I had practiced a great deal at target shooting and became too well acquainted with firearms, and I learned to love the army life above everything else in the world."

"In addition to these things, my name sets me forth correctly—I am a wanderer and a rover by nature. I hate to be tied down. I was not intended for married life. With these influences working in my veins the step from discontent to what I did was a short one. Of course I am sorry for what I did, any same man would be, and I am sane, but that doesn't help matters of fact."

"Loved My Wife."

"I loved my wife, spite of what I have done; I loved her too well to desert her and leave her with memories of ruined romance to keep her company during the rest of her life."

"I decided the easiest way out was to kill her. Most men after doing that would have been sleepless and haunted by visions at night. I was not. I sleep like a top and didn't have a single dream that I can remember."

"I'm sorry I had to kill the other chap, but I was afraid he would squeal. Killing him did not do any good, for I did not have presence of mind enough to remember that those army automatics were numbered."

The proceedings at the inquest were brief, only two witnesses testifying. These were a detective and a policeman. The latter told of going to the scene of the crime the night of the murders. The two pistols, ten empty shells and five bullets, which were found in the steel men at the hearing did not commit themselves, but asked the order to be interpreted as to permit them to receive a part of the open top equipment.

Other witnesses in their testimony pointed to the necessity of rushing coal to northern Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, while lake transportation was available.

Plans for the movement of the coal to this territory will be considered at a meeting of coal operators here on Friday. The meeting will be held at the railway executives at New York Wednesday.

Shortage of railroad equipment was again mentioned during the hearing. Mr. Willard, declaring it was impossible to get more cars or locomotives immediately. Mr. Townsend predicted that the present shortage, together with the country's future needs, were such as to require an addition of 10,000 cars to the road equipment in the next five years. This equipment, Mr. Townsend said, would cost more than $3,000,000,000.

Wanderer was asked by the committee to give his opinion of the accumulation of steel products were given by Mr. Townsend, his figures showing almost half of the factory output of the Pittsburgh-Johnstown district.

Backing up the plea of the steel men, Edward F. Sherrill of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, urged that gondola cars be exempted from the commission's order.

critical and that Germany needed help.

It was extremely important, said Dr. Simons that the capital sum of reparations be known. He declared the German plan for coal was now before the experts, and announced he would submit to the conference tomorrow a plan for supplying material to the devastated regions.

Premier Millerand at the opening of the session informed the German delegation that the allied ministers and experts were willing to receive any suggestions concerning coal and discuss them with the German.

Premier Millerand commented that Stinnes' declaration had neither been exact nor given in a courteous manner.

The conference will meet next Sunday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock.

Offensive Speech by Stinnes.

Taking up again today the question regarding coal deliveries from Germany, the allied conference at the request of Konstantin Fehrenbach, the German chancellor, agreed to hear Hugo Stinnes, the great coal operator, and Otto Hue, president of the German Miners' National association.

Dr. Walter Simons, the German foreign minister, at the opening of the sessions, said that these men did not represent the German government, but he thought it advisable to hear two men so intimately connected with coal production in Germany.

It is the custom of the conference for the speaker to remain seated, but Herr Stinnes stood up to stand because I want to look my adversaries in the eye." This was the opening sentence of what the allied delegation described as an offensive speech. Premier Delacroix, of Belgium, who presided, on one occasion reminding Stinnes that his language was too fulsome.

Dr. Simons said afterward to the correspondents he regretted Stinnes had used such violent and aggressive language. Stinnes said in substance:

"The military protocol which the Germans were requested to sign July 7, will increase discontent and disorders in Germany, which will make it more difficult to maintain our coal production, and will not help us to increase it."

It is all very well for you to tell us that unless our coal production and deliveries to you increase you will occupy the Ruhr. I may tell you that if you did not expect the occupation of the Ruhr to obtain more coal than you now do, you would find yourselves mistaken. No one would get less coal, but less, because the miners would refuse to work. They are doing now all they can with the meager food with which they are supplied."

Herr Millerand said yesterday that the Germans were not so much as a matter of right, and whoever is not afflicted with the disease of victory."

Called by Delacroix.

Herr M. Delacroix interrupted and said:

"The object of this conference is to arrive at a peaceful solution, and I must therefore ask Herr Stinnes not to be too provocative."

"This conference is the ear through which Europe could hear the facts. That is why I wish to speak. Without cooperation nothing can be done. That is why I wish to speak as a matter of right and not one of privilege. I cannot speak as a matter of privilege, but his figures regarding German production are quite wrong. Germany has not produced 75 per cent of her pre-war production. The figures of 55 per cent of the German iron industries are at work."

"The reparations committee is now demanding 23,000,000 tons per year. It is impossible to comply."

"The Ruhr output in May was 220,000 tons per day. It has now reached 255,000 tons on the basis of 300 working days per month."

"I recognize that Germany may try to precipitate occupation of the Ruhr, which would result were the miners to strike. I think that if black troops as the instrument of public authority are used, the feeling of every white man will recoil and the allies will get no coal."

"If the allies insist upon their German, the European coal situation, otherwise, might be solved within the year. The allies will be permanently disorganized and Europe will be permanently exhausted."

Hue Wins Point.

Herr Hue spoke impressively and lengthily on conditions of miners living in Germany. He said:

"Increasing coal digging in Germany cannot be done over a green cloth. It depends upon food, upon clothing, upon recreation, upon hours and upon stimulating their interest in their work, and also forming within them the purpose of their past. The miners of Germany can do better work and increase their production by working six hours a day, rather than by eight."

"The question of coal production is not for Germany alone. It is an international question and the miners are in a position to play a very great role in solving it."

Wanderer probably will be taken before the grand jury on Monday, State Attorney Hoyne said he would ask a speedy trial. Wanderer did not repeat his confession to the coroner's jury, though he was present at the inquest. Instead the coroner read the original typed confession of Walter Stinnes, who had said nothing to add.

Carl Johnson, brother-in-law of Wanderer, was the only member of the family to be present.

Both kept their eyes averted from the other, and no sign of recognition passed between them.

Wanderer was arraigned on two charges of murder late today after he had been ordered by a coroner's jury. He will be arraigned in a police court Monday.

"The reparations committee is now demanding 23,000,000 tons per year. It is impossible to comply."

"The Ruhr output in May was 220,000 tons per day. It has now reached 255,000 tons on the basis of 300 working days per month."

"I recognize that Germany may try to precipitate occupation of the Ruhr, which would result were the miners to strike. I think that if black troops as the instrument of public authority are used, the feeling of every white man will recoil and the allies will get no coal."

Hue Wins Point.

Herr Hue spoke impressively and lengthily on conditions of miners living in Germany. He said:

"Increasing coal digging in Germany cannot be done over a green cloth. It depends upon food, upon clothing, upon recreation, upon hours and upon stimulating their interest in their work, and also forming within them the purpose of their past. The miners of Germany can do better work and increase their production by working six hours a day, rather than by eight."

"The question of coal production is not for Germany alone. It is an international question and the miners are in a position to play a very great role in solving it."

Wanderer probably will be taken before the grand jury on Monday, State Attorney Hoyne said he would ask a speedy trial. Wanderer did not repeat his confession to the coroner's jury, though he was present at the inquest. Instead the coroner read the original typed confession of Walter Stinnes, who had said nothing to add.

Carl Johnson, brother-in-law of Wanderer, was the only member of the family to be present.

Both kept their eyes averted from the other, and no sign of recognition passed between them.

Is Stationed at Tientsin.

Peking, July 10.—(By the Associated Press)—Generals Wu Pei-Fu and Tsoo-Kun are reported to be moving forces towards Peking along the Peking-Hankow railway in defiance of the warning given the government by the diplomatic corps here yesterday that in case of an uprising no fighting must take place in Peking and that the city must not be subjected to bombardment.

General Tuan Chi-Jui, former pre-mer, who is exercising dictatorial powers, has appointed Tuan Chi-Kuei, a former war minister to be chief of the forces moving to check the advance.

Martial law has been put into effect and the western gates of the city are guarded against the unauthorized entry of troops.

Forces commanded by Tuan Chi-Jui, former premier and minister of war, are surrounding Peking.

General Tuan Chi-Jui's threatening attitude is a result of the government's dismissal of General Hsu Shu Chene, as resident commissioner for Inner Mongolia.

United States Forces in Peking. Washington, July 10.—American forces now in Peking consist of a legion guard of 275 marines, commanded by Colonel Mason Gulick.

While no American army forces are stationed there, the fifteenth infantry, the only American army detachment in China, is at Tientsin, about 30 miles from Peking, and could be brought up to the capital on short notice, officials said today. In addition to the American guard, a number of other powers have permanent legation guards at Peking.

No report of a threatened attack on Peking has reached either the war department or marine corps headquarters.

The American marine guard is the largest at Peking. The total strength of the entire international force there is estimated at 1,400.

In the event of an attack this force probably would be commanded by Colonel Gulick, who is believed here to be the ranking eight military officer at the Chinese capital.

Japan's guard at Peking is only slightly smaller than that of the United States, while England's force is third. Other countries which have armed guards there are France, Italy, Holland and Belgium.

Germany and Austria did have guards at Peking, but they were interned when China entered the war.

Besides the American infantry regiment of about 1,000 men at Tientsin, there are approximately 2,300 other foreign troops there, according to information here. They include 1,500 Italian, 500 British, 750 Japanese and 700 French.

Developments of the convention are being watched with interest by a number of labor, liberal and radical leaders who are not directly participating. Robert La Follette Jr. attended the opening session on behalf of his father, but refused to comment on the elder La Follette's position on the platform of the presidential nomination. W. Z. Foster, secretary of the general committee, which conducted the first session, said: "The convention will be a great success."

Today's session was given over largely to key-note addresses and organization work. Allen McCurdy, of New York city, made a keynote speech, and the national prohibition and democratic platforms were adopted and declared the time ripe for a new deal politically.

Today's session got under way the Friends of Irish Freedom arrived, set up a booth on the sidewalk and unfurled banners urging the third party "to recognize Irish independence."

WILL ASK REPEAL OF HIGH COST FUND

Republican Senator Expresses Belief That Money Was Used to Boost Campaign of Palmer.

St. Louis, July 10.—Repeal of the appropriation granted by the last congress to the department of justice to fight the high cost of living will be demanded by Senator Kenyon on the ground that it was used primarily to boost Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer for the democratic presidential nomination, the senator announced today.

Kenyon, republican senator of Iowa, and chairman of the senate committee investigating presidential campaign expenditures, which is holding hearings here, said he was convinced that "little of this appropriation was used to fight the high cost of living."

Senator Kenyon will leave for Washington for several conferences which, he said, were "secret, but very important." Later he will go to Maine for a vacation, he said.

Senator Kenyon pointed out that the investigating committee was instructed by congress to investigate presidential campaign expenditures by the republican and democratic nominees. Campaign activities of Governor Cox and Senator Harding probably "would be looked into," he said.

Not From Committee.
He said he was convinced, from the testimony presented before the committee, that the manner in which the department of justice had used the high cost of living appropriation had been a "great misappropriation of public funds." The appropriation totaled around a half million dollars, Senator Kenyon thought. Some of the senator's statements were made in an informal talk to newspaper men, and were not to be considered as emanating from the committee itself.

The committee concluded its hearings here today with the examination of several witnesses, among whom was Miss Anna Lurie Meahan, stenographer at the Missouri "H. C. L." bureau, who told of preparing what she learned a year ago from the secretaries of the people concerning the democratic party. She said she understood these programs had been mailed from the bureau to many

ROOSEVELT TO SEE GOV. COX MONDAY

Democratic Standard-Bearers Will Hold First Meeting Since Convention at Columbus Tomorrow.

Dayton, Ohio, July 10.—Governor Cox and Franklin D. Roosevelt, the democratic standard-bearers, will have their first meeting since the San Francisco convention in the executive office at Columbus next Monday afternoon. The governor will receive a telegram from Mr. Roosevelt today saying he will leave St. Louis tomorrow evening, and will arrive in Columbus about noon Monday. Governor Cox will go to Columbus either Sunday evening or early Monday morning.

Governor Cox will get his first-hand information on the San Francisco convention tomorrow from Judge T. T. Ansberry, of Washington, D. C., who was a delegate from the District of Columbia and one of the governor's leaders in the convention. He will arrive tomorrow morning and go direct to the governor's home at Trail's End.

Messages were received today from Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia; Secretary of the Treasury Houston and a letter from Miss Katherine Wright, of Dayton, a sister of the famous Wright brothers, aviators.

Senator McKellar, of Tennessee, and David R. Francis, former ambassador to Russia, also sent felicitations.

"Keep a level head," was the greeting sent by Harvey C. Garber, Ohio democratic leader, who for many years was the governor's bitter political enemy. Garber wired from Denver.

Governor Cox today corrected published statements that he is of English descent by extraction. His mother's parents were of English and Scotch descent.

Governor Cox today received an invitation from W. J. Southam, Hamilton, Ontario, to attend a luncheon there August 9 given by Southam in honor of the imperial party's delegates, including Lord Burnham, the North's wife and other leading journalists of England and Canada. The invitation suggested that Governor Cox speak on international relations and on the issue of nations. The governor has not indicated whether he will accept the invitation.

Position on League.

Governor Cox has issued no statement on his position on the league of nations since his nomination, and it was said today he probably would make none prior to his speech of acceptance. It was stated by those in the group that he, however, that he is in perfect accord with the democratic platform declaration on the subject as represented by the following statement:

"We advocate the immediate ratification of the treaty without reservations which would impair its essential integrity, but do not oppose the acceptance of any reservations making clearer or more specific the obligations of the United States to the league of nations.

The governor stated today that he considered the democratic platform a wise one to the people, and that it was up to him to redeem it.

At the proposed conference between the president and the president of the league of nations will be one of the subjects discussed.

The governor played golf this afternoon at the Mayfield Club with Sam Hill Smith and Lee Warren James, of Dayton, and Ellsworth H. Augustus, of Cleveland, going eighteen holes. Paired with Augustus, a strapping lad with a mighty stroke, the presidential nominee's record was saved. He often went into the rough and it generally took a five or a six for him to make a hole.

Apparently a little bit chagrined at his showing, he commented to his friends that "between national conventions and tournaments, this foursome seems shot to pieces."

The Ohio State Golf association tournament had been on all week. The governor this evening presented the chief trophy, the governor's cup, to the winner of the tournament.

Harold Webster, Inverness Country Club, Toledo.

Other than conferring with Judge Ansberry, the governor has no conference with any other democratic and expects to spend the day at his home at Trail's End.

CANDLER OPPOSES EXPRESS MERGER IN VIEW OF CLAIMS

Chairman Murphy Candler, of the state railroad commission, has objected to the approval by the interstate commerce commission of the merger of the Southern Express company with the American Railway Express company, until a full arrangement is made by the former.

corporation to settle claims that may be held against it by Georgia citizens.

Mr. Candler, mailed by special delivery Saturday evening, a copy of the former resolution adopted by the senate Friday, providing for an investigation of the subject, and also enclosed the following explanatory letter:

Hon. G. B. McGinty, Secretary Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C.
Sir:—We are instructed by the rail commission of Georgia to file with you and ask you to bring to the attention of the Southern Express company, a copy of a resolution concerning an application of the constituent stockholding companies in the American Railway Express company, for the approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the corporate existence and operation of the latter company, unanimously passed by the senate of the state of Georgia on July 9.

The rail commission of Georgia, in accordance with the fourth paragraph of said resolution, desires respectfully to submit this object to your approval, as far as possible under existing law, as it has been made by the Southern Express company, one of the stockholders of the American Railway Express company, for the adjustment and payment of just claims pending against said Southern Express company.

The company is a Georgia corporation, represented by its charter, as we understand, to maintain an office in Atlanta. Our information is that the officers were not in Atlanta, and that there was no office, agent or representative in Georgia.

AMBUSHED MEN FIRE ON NEW ORLEANS CAR

Attempt to Wreck Trolley Features Disorders Inci- -dental to Strike.

New Orleans, July 10.—Arrests were promised as result of the attempt late last night to wreck a Claiborne car. An injury of a minor nature occurred in a shot between ambushed men and deputy United States marshals. The affair last night was the most serious disturbance of its kind since the New Orleans Railway and Light company started to carry out the orders of the federal court to operate cars regardless of the strike of platform men.

The Claiborne car was on its way toward the business section of the city from the extreme lower end of the city when it was ambushed on the track. Where trees cast a deep shadow, a brick was hanging by a wire from the trolley pole. It was torn from the pole in an effort to keep from being struck that the motorman was injured, the wire being charged.

A deputy marshal was hit in the darkness and returned by the deputy marshal. No one was hit so far as could be determined.

In normal times the Transvaal mines are the largest consumers of explosives in the world.

ASSESSORS AFTER WAREHOUSE DATA

Thomasville, July 10.—(Special) The tax assessors of Camilla caused considerable of a stir this week when they got out after the holders of 1918 cotton, asking the warehousemen for a list of all those who had cotton stored with them. The warehousemen demurred on the ground that the holders had the right to ask for information regarding an individual's holdings, they could not be legally required to open the books upon a demand, and that they had no information. After much discussion the matter was submitted to the attorney general, who ruled with the assessors.

The assessors next tried summons to a number of men who were supposed to have a lot of cotton sold all of their old cotton, however, as also their new, so there was nothing doing again for the assessors. Cotton grown in 1919 was exempt and most of that held in warehouses was of that vintage.

COOLIDGE, IF ELECTED, TO MEET WITH CABINET

Plan Favored by Harding to Bring About Better Team Work.

Marion, Ohio, July 10.—In order to benefit by the judgment of his "chief partner," Senator Harding announced today that if he is elected president on the republican ticket the vice president would be invited to participate in all cabinet meetings. This would be done, according to the announcement, for the purpose of bringing about "team work" between the president and vice president, while it is the senator's view that it would bring about greater co-operation between the executive and legislative departments.

"Senator Harding believes," the statement says, "the country would greatly profit through the participation of the vice president in the cabinet conferences of the administration. It not only would elevate the office of the vice president, but would give the vice president the sound advice and able assistance of his chief partner in handling the nation's affairs."

Colonia company No. 18, of the military department of the order, will be present in full uniform to act as honorary escort and guards.

SAYS CORN MADE HIM PURLOIN AUTOMOBILE

Henry G. Ledford, a soldier, at Camp Jessup, told Judge T. C. Hatchcock, in the municipal court, Saturday, that corn liquor rubbed him of his memory, and as a result he was bound over by Judge Hatchcock on $500 bond on a charge of larceny of an automobile.

It was charged that Ledford, while intoxicated, got into an automobile, the property of Mrs. F. C. W. of Beresford, and invited an aged man to take a ride with him. The latter, it was alleged, believing that Ledford owned the car, accepted the invitation and was lured into the trap under the hood, according to the testimony, when the aged man realized that the driver was intoxicated and jumped out as the car struck a tree. Ledford claimed he did not remember anything that occurred.

LAKEWOOD CONCERT HAS FEATURE PROGRAM

An Absolute Reduction On Thin Summer Dresses

Beautiful Printed Voiles : Brand-New Cool and Crisp Frocks

All summer wash dresses under $20 are offered at absolute clearance prices—prices so low as to lead us to expect to move every one from off our racks in two days. There are two outstanding reasons for this unusual offering:

First: These dresses must be disposed of to make room for other lines we shall be ready to open soon.

Second: Out of the thousands of these dresses sold during the past month we have none left in a size larger than 40—most are 36's and 38's.

Therefore, we have gone through our entire stock of thin wash dresses under $20.00, and have underpriced them for this final clearance, and the values are so very extraordinary that we have no doubt but what one or two days' selling will close them out.

A BRIGHT OUTLOOK.

Prior to the nomination of Governor Cox for the presidency, The Sun and New York Herald carried an election forecast in which it conceded the democratic party even more than an "even break" for success in the election next fall.

It listed the states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, Kentucky, Missouri, New Mexico, and Arizona as being safely dem.

These seventeen states will cast 181 votes in the electoral college. The total number of votes in the electoral college is 531, a majority of which, or 266 votes, is necessary to elect the next president.

Deducting the 181 votes of the "solid south," with Arizona and New Mexico included, leaves, according to The Sun and New York Herald's reckoning, "350 electoral votes out of which the republicans must get 266 to win the election."

"Starting with an almost certain 181 votes to their credit before invading the northern field," said our New York contemporary—which, by the way, is republican through and through, and a staunch champion of Harding's candidacy—

"the democrats need to find only 55 votes among all the northern states to elect the president. If they carry New York state, with its 45 votes, they would have to pick up, here and there, only 40 more votes to win the election, and these votes should not be difficult to find, especially since Ohio, with its 24, is this year the mighty uncertain asset to the republican party."

Since that was written Governor Cox, of Ohio, and Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, of New York, have been nominated for the presidency and vice presidency, respectively, by the democrats.

Owing to his extreme popularity in his home state—which is attested by the fact that he is the only man, with the exception of Rutherford B. Hayes, who has ever been thrice elected governor of Ohio—coupled with the fact that Ohio is always considered doubtful battle-ground for the republicans, it is almost as good as a foregone conclusion that the Buckeye state, with its 24 electoral votes, will next November swing to its "favorite son" who is, for the third time, its governor.

Which will add 24 to the 181 electoral votes—a total of 205—that any frank political prognosticator will concede to the democrats at this stage of the campaign.

That leaves 30 states, with an aggregate electoral vote of 326, from which the Cox-Roosevelt ticket must draw the 61 additional votes that it must have in order to win.

What is true as to Cox's popularity in his home state is largely true of Franklin D. Roosevelt in New York. He is prominent and well liked there. New York state at all times and at best, all other things being equal, is "doubtful" as between the democrats and the republicans. This year the chances of carrying it are more than favorable to the democrats.

If New York, with its 45 electoral votes, goes democratic next fall—as it probably will—Cox and Roosevelt will have to skirmish for only 16 additional votes, with 29 states from which to draw them!

Indiana, with a strength of 15 in the electoral count, is one of the proveable "doubtful" states. But this year, with its "favorite son," Thomas R. Marshall, vice president of the United States, and "Tom" Taggart, one of the most powerful men in the state, politically, both in complete sympathy with the democratic ticket and both working harmoniously and aggressively for its election, Indiana can hardly be classed as "doubtful." It is almost certainly democratic!

But even if Indiana should happen to go republican, there are still 28 other states, beside New York, Ohio, New Mexico, Arizona and the "solid south," from which the democrats might gather the requisite sixteen electoral votes.

Among those states are, for example, California, with 13 votes—the 13 that elected Woodrow Wilson four years ago!—Minnesota, with 12, in which state the Cox-Roosevelt combination will make an unusually strong appeal; Colorado, with 6; Nebraska, with 8; Montana, with 4; Michigan, with 15, etc., in each of which states the democrats have more than a "fighting chance" for endorsement at the polls.

With such a G. O. P. newspaper as The Sun and New York Herald—whose chief pride lies in the historic accuracy of its pre-election forecasts—predicting in advance of the democratic convention's nomination that the republicans will have to comb the countryside, in order to pull through next November, the outlook from the democratic viewpoint now, with Cox, and Roosevelt in the field, is, indeed, more than encouraging.

REED AND THE LEAGUE.

Upon his return from San Francisco, whither he had gone to participate in the democratic national convention deliberations, only to be denied a seat as a member of the Missouri delegation, United States Senator James A. Reed made a public speech in which he characterized the league of nations covenant a "league of treason and a covenant of national death."

Subsequently the Missouri democratic member of the "poison squad" sent his congratulations to Governor Cox and pledged his support of the national ticket in the forthcoming election.

In other words, Reed announced to the democratic presidential nominee and the country his willingness to work and vote for the success of a platform the paramount plank of which is a whole-hearted and unequivocal endorsement of a document which he has told the world he considers "a league of treason and a covenant of national death."

Elmer Reed did not mean what is said in his Kansas City speech of July 5, from which the quotation is taken, or else he is willing to condone "treason" and assist in bringing about the death of the nation in order to retain his identity with a party which is in power, and which, in all reasonable probability is to again receive the approval of the voters next November.

as our Commerce contemporary sees it:

"The farmer now roams in green pastures beside the still waters." His fry chickens bring a silver dollar each. His cotton brings 10 cents per pound. His corn sells readily at around $2.50 per bushel. He finds a ready demand for every surplus food product that he can produce. And, as a matter of fact, in justice to the producer, the tide should have turned, for he had a long, hard struggle to make buckle and tongue meet."

And now that the tide has turned in favor of the producer, production is in a great measure handicapped by a lack of help.

The demand for every farm product, at top-notch prices, ought to be an incentive to many to at least give the farming business a "try-out"—to become well-paid producers instead of idle consumers.

HIS TRIBUTE TO U. S.

In a "business" way, and taking the view that even genius, in a sphere other than that of "business," must look to the dollars and cents, Maurice Maeterlinck's American tour was unsuccessful.

But he didn't go home with a "grouch."

Since his return to France he has highly praised American ideals and institutions; and in the interviews given to American correspondents over there, the financial side of his lecture tour didn't figure.

Of that tour The Ohio, State Journal says:

"Large profits were promised. His inability to speak English made the lecture tour a failure and litigation resulted and is still unsettled. But despite his personal annoyances he studied and understood the spirit of the nation he was visiting and generously spoke of the happier experiences when his tour was completed."

His disappointment, in a financial way, didn't blind him to the beauty he saw around him, and, over and above all, to the spirit of the people. True genius and fine philosopher that he is, he looked for the good in us and found it. And that was what was uppermost in his thought when he left us.

It is stated that he came expecting to find great cause for criticism, but did not. Instead, he found a people and country worthy of all praise.

So, in spite of whatever business troubles he may have encountered, for the reasons given, he is glad that he came, as are the people that now know the man and the genius better than they did before.

CORNCOB MAKES GOOD.

We know about the stone, rejected of the builders, which finally became the head of the corner, and of this and that cast-away material whose long undreamed value was accidentally discovered—to bring wealth and comfort to communities!

We are learning about these things—the little, apparently insignificant things—every day; and what we are learning is that instead of being in the way of the world's work, they would have greatly helped it had we only given more thought to them. What we have deemed waste, science has proved was wealth in disguise.

Not to go into what has been done with cotton seed—formerly cast out, to a certain extent, as in the farmers' way, the chemist now comes forward and calls a halt on the burning of surplus corncocks, or leaving them to rot on scrap piles—because the corncock pipe market has but a limited demand for them.

"You are burning up big money," says the chemist, "when you set fire to corncock pyramid!"

That statement is enough to make us sit up and take notice!

"The United States," says The Brooklyn Standard-Union, "produces some three billion bushels of corn in a good year," and—

"This means an equal quantity of cobs. Sixty million tons of cobs would fill Broadway (N. Y.) from Bowling Green to 125th street with a pile more than 150 feet high.

"Think of all this great heap of material going to waste all these years!"

And now the laboratory men have found out how to make it into adhesives, and cellulose, and acetate of lime. They can produce for 20 cents thirty pounds of furfural from a ton of cobs; and furfural is a basic dyestuff worth at present a pound, and the world's best insecticide.

"Corn is mighty; but it actually wants as though science would presently make the cobs worth more than the corn."

It is the "humble" corncock no longer. It is coming into its rich, rural rights. It's in the banking business. You'll never find it now "At the Sign of the Scrap Pile!"

Whether the money it may make, put to its new uses, for those who couldn't see its value before will prove the blessing that our friend, the corncock pipe, has been to many, is an open question; for great has been the comfort of the old corncock, with its cane stem, whether smoked in the country chimney corners, or in the wise old inhabitants, or in the brief after-lunch siestas in the humdrum cities.

The visions and dreams a corncock pipe calls up do not fade in the fragrant smoke. To many it beats as our Commerce contemporary sees it:

"Before I close a business deal," a Georgia philosopher wrote, "I light my old corncock pipe and take a thoughtful smoke. That always sets me going right!"

It would be a real calamity if the newly-discovered worth of the corncock should place pipes of that material beyond the reach of lovers of a fine and friendly smoke!

In the meantime—hall to the corncock, coming so greatly into its own; and we'll hope for the best as to smokes hereafter!

the best Havana in bringing back old times, old loves, old friends.

HOME-TOWN HELPERS.

Love of country life; pride in every achievement of home-town and country, with faith and loyalty, are the things that make the future of every community secure.

That is the summary of The Carrollton (Ga.) Free Press, as to the prosperity of that town and Carroll county, where people "do not merely live happily, but do well in a business way."

Too many, the Carrollton paper says, are getting away from this love of country life, because the only question with them is one of money—

"If they look out at a fertile field, it is merely to estimate the cash value of the crop growing thereon. Their minds are incessantly figuring. If the figures go wrong for a year, their life seems utterly blasted. Very likely they will pull up and hike themselves to some sordid city street, where a fat pay envelope may be gathered—as long as good times last."

The money-making side has to be considered, but it shouldn't be placed high and above all other advantages. That is the point made.

But as an offset to the class that see only a humdrum existence in country life, there are those to whom it means everything that is worth while:

"The beauty of the changing landscape fascinates them, and softens all toil and disappointments. The annual miracle of growth of vegetation fills their hearts with satisfaction at the bounty of the earth and the goodness of the Giver of All."

"Every sight and sound of country life has its sweetness to them. They enjoy the simple social life of the country town, and take abundant pride in its public institutions, and believe it is the best country town on earth."

"It is stated that he came expecting to find great cause for criticism, but did not. Instead, he found a people and country worthy of all praise.

So, in spite of whatever business troubles he may have encountered, for the reasons given, he is glad that he came, as are the people that now know the man and the genius better than they did before.

Macon Attorneys to Begin Work
To Prevent Mills From Catching

Newcastle, Pa., July 10.—(Special)—An injunction proceeding to word received here today by L. C. Sturgis, business manager of the local nine, from Bruce T. Jones, attorney for the locals in Macon, Georgia.

Mills, after signing a contract to play with the Cords for this reason, jumped to the Atlanta team. Sturgis then announced he would test the right of the Georgia nine to have Mills appear in their

Ruth's Climb Is Feature in American

Chicago, July 10.—With a new world's record within his grasp, "Babe" Ruth, the New York slugger, is driving toward the batting championship of the American League.

Reposing in fourth place a week ago, the Bronx slugger is now at .366—33 points behind George Sisler, the St. Louis star, who is leading the league. Ruth passed the 300 mark Saturday at Cleveland and Joe Jackson, of Chicago, who are tied for the third place honors with .331. Sisler, in first place, is leading .19.

Ruth won one home run to his total during the week, making it twelve, and has collected sixteen hits in his last nine games. In addition he pulled away from Speaker for scoring honors. He has crossed the plate seventy times, while the Clevelander is two runs behind him.

Ruth, of Washington, continued to top the paths, and has outdistanced his base-stealer with thirty-five thefts. Other leading batters:

Weaver, Chicago, .365; Rice, .357; Milan, Washington, .346; Johnston, Cleveland, .344.

Einars, Boston, pitcher, outdistanced and pinch-hitter, determined to lead the league, is leading the National league batters, who have participated in forty or more games. He is batting .403 for forty-seven games, which he cracked 29 hits in seventy-two games.

Hornby, however, is the real leader among the regulars, with a record of 1-1, and is leading the Holloman, of Chicago, had had the St. Louis star as a run getter, having crossed the plate fifty times.

He is the only one to have

Moran adds interest to his year by declaring he has evidence that Carpenter will never fight again.

Levinson, of the Bronx, wanted to make a bet with Dan Morgan that the Frenchman will run out of the match and stand ready to place some of his men on the pre-arranged batters:

Morgan, of the Bronx, signed to attend.

Many Youngsters Expected

To Enter Boys' Event.

Many youngsters are expected to enter the boys' event, which will be held on the 25th.

Other leading batters: E. Smith, New York, .354; Koenchy, Brooklyn, .353; Niedermeyer, Pittsburgh, .326.

Ben Tinecup, the Indian pitcher with Louisville, is in first place in the national amateur leadership.

The American association that all attempts to dislodge him have been unavailing. He is setting the pace with 15 wins.

Rapey of St. Paul, went into a tie with Dressen, his team-mate, for honors in base-stealing.

Tommy, of the Bronx, Kansas City, now leads the Harrahan, St. Paul, in home run hitting, having a total of nine. The St. Paul slugger has eight.

Carleton Smith, whose address is the Walton building, who is in charge of the affairs of the national amateur, has not yet turned 15 years of age by March 1 may enter both the boys' and junior tournaments, which boys over 15 and under 18 on March 1, may enter the junior tournaments.

Change of Scenery Is Always Big Aid To Diamond Players

By Hugh S. Fullerton.

Art Fletcher is demonstrating the truth of the baseball adage that a change of teams always does a player good. I seldom have known a case of a veteran who has been a good ball player for years with one team and then slumped, failing to make a sudden come-back when transferred to another club.

Take the cases of Jake Dauber, Larry Gardner, Slim Sallee, Shucker, Duf Lewis—a score of others in recent baseball history to prove the point.

The truth is that a ball player, more than any man in any business, is liable to fall into a rut and lose his value to his team. The chances are he does not know it himself, but he believes it when playing his good ball that he ever did, but there is something lacking.

When he is sold, traded or released, that he is in danger of slipping out of the big show and the result is a quick return to form.

Hall players who have served a long time on one team, called friends, form circles of acquaintances, get other interests that keep their minds more or less off the game, and unless a player has his heart set on baseball, he will not play.

His mind is not on his game, and baseball is a game which demands entire attention and concentration.

The effect of worry upon a player is greater than can be imagined by any outsider. I remember the case of an infidel with the old "I'm not a Christian" idea. He was one of the greatest ball players in the business, a fighting, hustling, determined man who thought, ate and slept baseball. In the middle of one season he suddenly slumped. He fell off in his hitting, he pulled his plays, his fielding grew worse and worse, and it looked as if the manager had had a touch of insanity. He confessed that the dread of having to learn the situation worried him day and night.

"Remembered that hit Doc Miller made past me today," he asked. "Well, I was standing there again, thinking about money, when he hit the ball. I ought to have smothered it but couldn't move."

Finally his trouble was entirely mental, for about a week later, the market rallied, he sold at a slight loss, and immediately started playing ball at top speed again.

Fletcher Comes Back.

Art Fletcher is back, simply mental. He is an extremely conscientious, honest fellow, anxious to give the best he has. He had a bad start this spring and then he had a bad winter because he knew he was not delivering. He accepted much of the blame for the bad showing of the Giants, during the early season, as his own. The doctor had become to help the team win, the worse his playing got. His friends sympathized with him and made the silent suggestion that he was traded to the Phils. The burden he had been carrying was lifted. He jumped into the line-up of the tail-end team and started to play ball with the fleetness of a few years ago, putting all the dash and fight and fire into his work. He got a good start. His fiery spirit proved contagious, and the team started winning.

Confidence Inspires Babe Ruth.

The mental attitude of the player is a bigger thing in baseball than any element in the game, and it is the one undroppable element. Gameness has nothing to do with it in so far as it is a matter of nerve or courage, simply of faith and confidence.

For instance, Babe Ruth is now a great hitter, but he has just as great a potentiality ever since he got into baseball. He had the power and the swing, but he lacked the confidence. He had (and has) a weakness. The fact that he had a weakness affected his hitting.

A certain kind of ball he believed he could not hit—therefore he could not hit it. Now he thinks he can hit anything anyone can pitch, and therefore he does.

There is the added advantage in his case of the fear he inspires in opposing pitchers. He is a terror to opposing pitchers, and he is a terror to him.

Here comes the big letter, I'll sign him down across the letters and set him down.

"So they kept the ball close to his chin and he swatted it away. No, sir, pitcher fears that he will hit one out of the lot, so they try too hard, as a result, pitch wrong to him through trying too hard to pitch the ball far enough so the probable gets more balls pitched to him now where he likes to hit them than he ever did before."

Parker-Nade Hitter.

Years ago the ball players, or many of them, had the theory that the way to win ball games was to make the other team as stale as possible. Chicago's White Stockings, when Kels. Williamson, Burns, Pfeffer, Ryan and that gang were there, they used to say:

"Get out there and play baseball, and let them play you."

What they mean was to play to the limit, play the game as if against an ordinary team, and make the other team beat itself by playing against the White Sox reputation.

Years later a bunch of us were discussing the old school system as compared with the new, and I made the statement that a ball player with a reputation of being a great hitter would hit fifty points better than an equally good batter who had no reputation.

Several scoffed at the idea and challenged me to prove it. To make the test we selected a young fellow who was just a fair hitter and just breaking in. I started systematically to prove his reputation to make him a reputation as a hard hitter. He was not on the thing at all, and came to me several times to ask why I boosted him that way.

His idea was that the big league pitchers would lay for him and pitch harder to him than to others. Before June that fellow actually was convinced that he was a great a batter as I said he was. He came to me several times to ask why I boosted him that way.

I tried another experiment one spring. Before the season opened I made half a dozen bat bets that Johnny Evers would hit over .300 for the season. Each time I made a bet of a cent I told Johnny about it, and told Chubb about it, and he would buy all the hats he could wear. He and I framed a fake bet of 100 cents, agreeing that Johnny would hit .300. He and the players thought I was crazy—but Evers hit over .300 on the year and toward the end of the season when he seemed a bit bit weaker, harder to win those hats for me, he did not pass the mark for himself.

On the Screen of Sports

By HUGH S. FULLERTON

"We landed at the foot of Desbrosses and started to walk across to Broadway to go up town and a Ninth avenue elevated train roared by overhead. The old man never had seen an L train but it didn't scare him. He looked up, nudged Owen and remarked:

"Parson Davies is gone. The end of the career of one of the most picturesque figures the world of sport ever knew came in a quiet little village down in Virginia the other day."

The boxing ring knew him best—and he belonged to all sport—but he was almost as well known on race track and at ball games as on the squared ring, and he knew more persons in the sporting world than almost any man.

He and Tim Hurst, the inimitable umpire and referee, now gone to his reward, were great chums and Tim was the Parson who developed Tim as a boxer, recognizing his genius for handling men on the ball field.

There was a moment, and afterwards a month, when Tim and I went to lunch after the first game, and before the second started he told me the story of Parson, his old father and Owen—a man who had been a boxer and told properly. He started telling it as we left the grounds after shaking hands with the Parson and his baseball is a game which demands entire attention and concentration.

The effect of worry upon a player is greater than can be imagined by any outsider. I remember the case of an infidel with the old "I'm not a Christian" idea. Thoroughly disgusted at the showing of his team, Manager McGraw, the star of the Giants, recently informed Barney Dreyfus, of the Pittsburghers, he would consider any trade or deal that would bring new faces to the Giant roster. McGraw made another valiant attempt to land Wilbur Cooper, of the Pirates, but Manager Gibson vetoed the deal.

THE CONSTITUTION, ATLANTA, GA., TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1924.

The bullet which struck Hightower shattered his spine and penetrated the liver, but did not pass entirely through his body. Elkhart said he is critical. Lefevre is the son of Lucius M. Lefevre, formerly night yardmaster for the Central of Georgia.

Lefevre is said to have reported for duty today in an intoxicated condition and when he was ejected from the building by Chief Clerk A. K. King, the night watchman, is alleged to have told Hightower that he would "get" him before many hours passed.

A short time later Lefevre returned to the yard office, climbed the stairs, shoved a pistol close to Hightower's back and fired. A number of clerks and workers from the building left after the shooting.

Hightower is 50 years of age, is married and has one daughter, Miss Anna Hightower, who is an operator at the station at Unadilla.

CASHIER CONVINCED BANK PRESIDENT

Savannah, Ga., July 10.—(Special)—H. L. Hedges, cashier, of the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Jesup, was the victim of a most unusual experience yesterday when he was met at the incoming train by police officers and detained until explanations were forthcoming.

J. L. Harper, president of the bank, after the cashier had left for Savannah on a periodic business trip, found the cash and cashier missing. He wired to the bank in Atlanta to inquire of his fate and requested the cashier held. Mr. Hedges returned to Jesup and had no trouble in convincing the bank president that his fears were unfounded. The bank president had simply made a mistake in balancing the cash, and acted hastily in this matter. The cashier made a full explanation and is on the job as usual.

GOVERNOR OF SONORA IN WAR AGAINST VICECrusade Against Gambling, Booze, Opium and Tenderloin Districts.

Agua Prieta, Sonora, July 18.—Following orders yesterday from the governor of Sonora ordering a crusade against vice of all sorts and subsequent closing of open saloons and gambling houses last night, officials today began raiding opium dives, arresting several Americans, Mexicans and Chinese.

Several hundred dollars worth of opium was seized in the establishments, which government officials declare to have been the largest resort of its kind in Mexico.

Arrests made this afternoon similar operations are expected to follow in Chihuahua.

The crusade in Sonora against vice will continue, and gambling, cessation of the sale of hard liquors and opium, will be terminated in all tenderloin districts by Friday evening.

Mr. Castro announced that, although no definite orders had been received he believed saloonkeepers would be given an opportunity to destroy or ship out of the state all forbidden liquors. After a certain time, he said, orders were expected from the War Department authorizing federal troops to concentrate and pour into the gutters all hard liquors. Illicit stills, which in the past have not been bothered except by federal taxation, will be unearthed and the coils chopped to bits, he declared.

D. S. CROSS AWARDED TO GENERAL MARCH

Washington, July 10.—By direction of President Wilson, a distinguished service cross was awarded today to General March, chief of staff of the army, for gallant service in the Philippines. The chief of staff, a colonel, was cited for "extraordinary heroism in action before Manila, Aug. 12, 1898. He gallantly led a charge on the enemy's breastworks, volunteers having been called for by the brigadier general commanding."

General Peyton C. March (1st lieutenant in the Astor battery) was awarded the cross for gallantry in action before Manila, Aug. 12, 1898.

He gallantly led a charge on the enemy's breastworks, volunteers having been called for by the brigadier general commanding."

ADMIRAL FISHER DIES FOLLOWING OPERATION

London, July 10.—Admiral John Arbuthnot Fisher, G.C.B., Baron Kildersdale, and former first lord of the admiralty, died this morning. Lord Fisher underwent a serious operation yesterday and failed to rally.

Lord Fisher had been seriously ill since early in May, when he underwent an operation.

He was born on the Island of Ceylon, January 25, 1841, and was the son of Captain William Fisher, of a Highland regiment stationed in the East at that time. He entered the navy when only 12 years of age, and was commissioned a lieutenant in 1860. From this time on his rise in the service was continuous. He was married in 1866 to Miss Frances Broughton, who died in 1918. He is survived by one son and three daughters.

Another FEDERAL ONE TO FIVE TONS

Why Have Your Truck "Laid-Up" When Federal Trucks With Our Service Will Stay On The Job?

FEDERAL TRUCKS stay on the job. Barring accidents, a Federal of either capacity from one to five tons will give months and months of service without begging a day off for repairs.

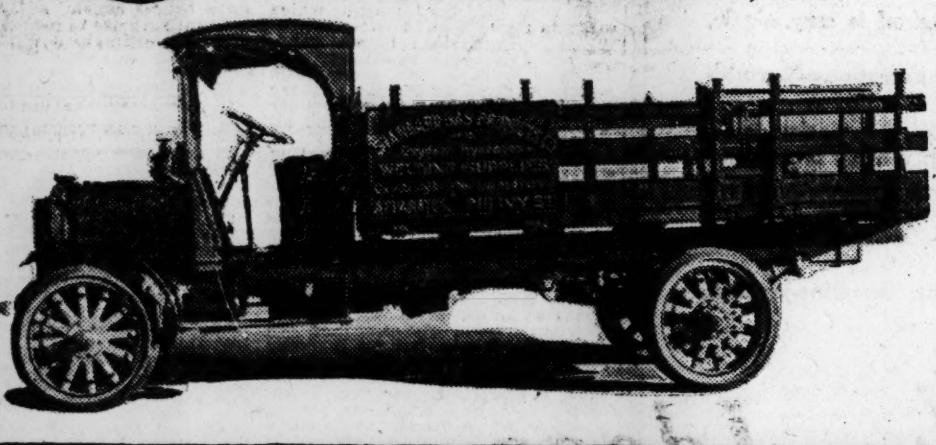

And when accidents do happen, and service is necessary, we have a corp of mechanics who do nothing but render service on trucks, and when a Federal comes into our shop it is put in running condition immediately.

Our large stock of parts make it possible for us to handle more than ninety five per cent of all repair jobs with parts from stock in Atlanta, thus avoiding long delay in getting parts from the factory.

We have a Federal and a body---or can build it in our own plant---to fit every business need.

8:14 WAS ESSEX TIME TO TALLAHASSEE, FLA.

Error in Advertisement Last Sunday Stated Time as 4:14.

In a half-page advertisement of the J. W. Goldsmith, Jr.-Grant company, in The Constitution last Sunday, reference is made to the performance of the Essex car during a record run, the time given for the record speed run to Tallahassee, Fla., was erroneously given as 48 hours and 14 minutes, while the actual total elapsed time between the two points was only 8 hours and 19 minutes.

The part of this advertisement pertaining to the record run, as printed last Sunday reads:

"Taylor W. Mitchell, Jr., piloting a Standard Stock Essex, carrying five passengers, left Atlanta Sunday at 2:30 p.m. and reached Tallahassee, Fla., at 10:34 a.m.

"Total distance covered, 320 miles.

"Record speed of record run was unfavorable, but despite this, the total elapsed time between Atlanta and Tallahassee was only 48 hours and 14 minutes.

"Our second record from Atlanta to Tallahassee of several hours better than any other record run.

"The average speed for the entire trip, counting all lost time and stops, was approximately 39 miles per hour."

This error was typographical and occurred after the copy, which was prepared by the service department of The Constitution, had been O. K.'d by officials of the J. W. Goldsmith, Jr.-Grant company.

ANNIVERSARY MONDAY

Of Battle of Boyne May Cause Trouble

Belfast, July 10.—Confidence that order will not be disturbed on Monday, notwithstanding elaborate preparations for the celebration of the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, is expressed by officials here, notwithstanding the sensitive condition.

Demonstrations have been forbidden in the city itself, but arrangements have been made for a great march to the Orange Hall, four miles distant, to which all processions will lead. It is expected that 20,000 persons will march in the Orange parade, and 10,000 in the demonstration.

Among the other resolutions will be one expressing the determination of Orangeites to defend the civil and religious liberties for which their ancestors fought at the Boyne river.

Local technicians of soldiers were detained at suburban Belfast yesterday, and marched into the city.

The city council, at a meeting yesterday, defeated a proposal to close the Orange Hall, the meetings being 25 to 27. Public meetings on Monday have been forbidden in Londonderry.

NEGROES IN BOSTON AID HOLMES INSTITUTE

Rev. B. H. Holmes, president of the Holmes Institute of Atlanta, delivered the principal address, telling of the principal address, telling of the grand lodge made a substantial donation to the new building fund of the institute.

Rev. W. L. Cole, grand chancellor Knight of Pythias, New York, addressed the session at the close of the session.

E. B. Barco, formerly one of the leading colored directors of Atlanta, was unanimously elected grand chancellor for the ensuing year. M. W. Bullock, grand keeper of records and seals; J. Gray, treasurer, and W. O. Taylor, medical director.

Rev. B. R. Holmes held a meeting in Columbia Hall, from the Zion church, which was presided over by Rev. B. W. Swain, pastor.

Addresses were delivered by prominent white and colored citizens.

Several meetings were held for the institute in the leading churches.

W. L. COLE REFUSES TO RESIGN HIS POST

St. Louis, July 10.—W. L. Cole today announced he would not resign as chairman of the republican state committee. The announcement followed the receipt of the committee's appointment at the annual republican mass meeting at Sedalia that he quit his post and that he make a decision on the request by today.

Cole said he had written State Supreme Justice John Kenanis of Kansas City, a letter containing his refusal to resign and asserting that he had done no wrong and that he would continue in his refusal to heed the wishes of a "minority of the party."

Cole has admitted he distributed $500 to H. L. Blake, friend of Lowden Landis, Missouri, but has maintained he did not know the $500 was from the Lowden camp.

BOY SCOUTS SEARCH FOR MISSING BROKER

New York, July 10.—Boy Scouts of the Eastern district today organized to help in the search for James Robert Blake, New York broker, who on July 2 started a skiff from Clason's Point to Fisher's Island, off the Connecticut shore, and has not been seen since.

The scouts joined in the search at the request of the American Legion.

It was announced that should the Boy Scouts be successful in their search the 1,000 reward offered for finding Mr. Blake or his boat will be refused under the rule prohibiting members of the organization taking pay for their services.

POLITICAL TURMOIL SEETHING IN JAPAN

Tokio, July 10.—(By the Associated Press)—Not since the advent of the Meiji period has Japan seen such political turmoil as that prevailing during the present sitting of the diet. The government has been unable to secure an election that it will have the support of the Seyuraku, or majority party. Nevertheless, in the fierce attack which the opposition has undertaken upon it, a display of liberal and free speech has developed that observers believe is inclined to have an important effect on the development of constitutional government in Japan.

690 Still Destroyed.

Talladega, Ala., July 10.—Agents of the federal prohibition enforcement office of Alabama have destroyed 690 barrels and 1000 gallons of illicit distilled and six hundred and forty-four prosecutions for violation of the Volstead act have been recommended for the past six months of 1920, according to figures published by J. Kelly Dixon, the enforcement officer.

Herschell-Spillman Motor Used in the Crow Elkhart Auto

In the opening announcement for the Laird Booth Motor corporation, printed in The Constitution last Sunday, the Crow Elkhart automobile, with this first division in the southern states, was described as having a "Special Spillman" motor. This was an error and should have read "Special Herschell-Spillman."

There is no motor known to general automobile merchants as the "Special Spillman."

NEW BRUNSWICK VOTES ON LIQUOR QUESTIONS

St. John, N. B., July 10.—The voters of New Brunswick voted today on a referendum which will empower the government:

1. To retain the present "dry" prohibition law adopted during 1919.

2. To introduce wine and beer licenses, or

3. To permit the sale of all spirits.

The "dry" forces which closed last night, has been very bitter.

FIST FIGHT AT CLOSE OF MEXICAN CONGRESS

Mexico City, July 10.—The extraordinary session of congress ended yesterday. For the first time in 10 years, the session adjourned at 11 p.m. according to Excelsior, a fist fight occurred between deputies. Luis Espinosa and General Mariano Gonzales came to blows at the closing session.

SIX AMERICAN AIRMEN TO FIGHT FOR POLAND

New York, July 10.—Six members of the American Flying club have responded to the recent call from Poland for members to volunteer for service in the Kosciusko Escadrille, according to Excelsior.

Names of volunteers announced today include C. E. Harp, Memphis, Tenn.

FIVE KILLED BY FALL OF MEXICAN AIRPLANE

Mexico City, July 10.—Five members of the crew of a military airplane, which was wrecked on Thursday at Alajuela, state of Zacatecas, were killed and three others were injured, according to an official report received at the war office here.

J. W. Mallory Resigns.

Annaniston, Ala., July 10.—(Special) J. W. Mallory, who was appointed by Governor Kilby to the county board of commissioners following his death in June, has resigned, according to the Kilby office.

Mallory gave as the reason for his resignation his desire to be relieved of his business affairs which prevented his giving necessary time to the duties of his office.

It is expected that T. C. Slaughter, constable of the county from the second district, will be appointed to take Mr. Mallory's place.

Dr. Meeker Resigns.

Washington, July 10.—Dr. Royal Meeker, United States commissioner of labor statistics, has resigned from that office, effective today, and was announced today, to accept appointment as editor-in-chief of the monthly bulletin of The International Labor Office of the League of Nations. Dr. Meeker is expected to leave July 31 for Geneva, Switzerland, to assume his new duties there.

Damage by Hail.

Davenport, Iowa, July 10.—A hail storm that swept this region yesterday did a quarter of a million dollars damage to crops. It was estimated today that large fields of corn were virtually destroyed and many orchards were stripped of fruit.

SOCIALISTS TO SEND COMMITTEE TO RUSSIA

Will Also Ask Wilson to Act on Appeal for Debts' Release.

Detroit July 19.—A committee of American socialists will go to Russia to study social and economic conditions as soon as passports can be obtained. It was decided here late today at a meeting of the socialist national committee here, to map plans for the coming political campaign.

The commission will be similar to the British mission which some time ago visited Russia. The American committee, composed of four members, will make a report on the condition of the socialist party of America. It was announced

Members of the commission are Alkernon, New York city; Dr. Joseph C. Clegg, minister of Philadelphia; James O'Neal, New York newspaper man, and Alexander Trachtenberg, doctor of philosophy, all from Russia following a revolution that preceded the overthrow of the czar.

The socialist party will make an immediate appeal to President Wilson

HAIR GROWN ON MR. BRITAIN'S BALD HEAD BY INDIANS' MYSTERIOUS HAIR GROWER

My head at the top and back was absolutely bald. The scalp was shiny. An expert said that as he thought the hair roots were extinct, and there was no hope of my ever having new hair grow. I was told to go to the Indians' country, where there is a Cherokee Indian "medicine man" who had an elixir that he asserted would grow my hair.

Now, after 10 months, with the elixir, following a revolution that preceded the overthrow of the czar.

Obviously, the hair roots had not been dead, but were dormant. I negotiated for and came into possession of the principle for growing hair, and obtained it from Kotsale, and later had the recipe put into practical form by a chemist.

That my own hair growth was permanent has been amply proved. Many men and women, also children, have reported satisfactory results from Kotsale.

How YOU May Grow YOUR Hair

My honest belief is that hair roots rarely die even when the hair falls out through dandruff, fever, excessive dryness or other disorders. I have been told by experts that often the hair roots are embedded within the scalp, covered by hard skin, so that they remain for a time like bulbs or seeds in a bottle which contain alkalis and hair lotions which contain alcohol are enemies to the hair, as they dry it, making it brittle and easily broken. These elements of nature which give new vitality to the scalp and hair.

PROVE FOR YOURSELF!

CALOMEL

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury-quicksilver; and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel today and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated tomorrow. Don't lose a day's work.

INSTEAD, TAKE

"Dodson's Liver Tone"

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you. Even children like its pleasant taste

PRACTICE DRILL IN MINE RESULTS IN TWO DEATHS

Seattle, Wash.—July 10.—Five men forming the mine team of the Pacific Coast Coal company at Black Diamond were overcome by gas today during a practice drill in an abandoned mine. Two are probably dead and three others rescued in a serious condition will likely recover, according to advice received in Seattle shortly after noon.

CLARK UNIVERSITY HOLDS ANNIVERSARY

Washington, July 10.—The first meeting of the assembly of the league of nations will be held on November 15, under the call which soon is to be issued by President Wilson.

The place for the session has been selected, it was said, at the state department today, and the world will be summoned to the allied governments. The president is understood to have favored Geneva, but most of the allies prefer Brussels.

The United States will not be represented at the league meeting as it is not a party to the treaty of Versailles. The president will issue the call at the invitation of the allied governments.

HARRY NEW HEADS SPEAKERS' BUREAU FOR REPUBLICANS

Chicago, July 10.—Republican national headquarters today announced that Senator Harry S. New, of Indiana, will head the republican campaign speaker's bureau.

Associated with New in charge of the eastern division with headquarters in New York will be George Thomas B. Miller, of Delaware, eastern manager for General Wood in the preconvention campaign, the announcement said.

CONCILIATOR TRYING TO END CIGAR STRIKE

Tampa, Fla., July 10.—Joseph R. Bresnahan, conciliator of the federal department of labor, arrived here today and was in conference this afternoon with representatives of the cigar manufacturers and workers in an effort to settle the labor trouble which has existed since April 17.

Efforts of the manufacturers to resume operation last Tuesday under the open-shop plan are meeting with success, they claim, while cigarmakers assert that many of those who returned to work have

LONG ARM OF LAW WILL GET SLAYER IN FROZEN NORTH

Ottawa, July 10.—A white man's judge is to be sent 2,000 miles into Hudson Bay territory to impress on the Eskimo the relentless justice of the white man's law.

ITCHY

A WAR-TIME ILL THAT'S SPREADING. HUNT'S SALVE CURES IT!

BED in the war trenches of Europe, a wave of ordinary ITCH is spreading over the country. This skin disease, history shows, has always been a scourge to the combatants of armies. It was common during the Civil War and following that conflict. There was an epidemic of the Itch after the Spanish-American War. Now history is repeating itself after the great European war.

Returned soldiers and those with whom they come in contact will find a recognized remedy for the Itch in Hunt's Salve, commonly known as "Hunt's Itch Salve." A veteran of the late '90's will testify to its merits.

If directions are followed, HUNT'S SALVE will prove a never failing salve. Directions of the Itch and other drugs will tell you all. He sells HUNT'S SALVE under a strict guarantee to refund the purchase price (75c) to any

A. Mafford, Oklahoma, man, among thousands who praise HUNT'S SALVE, says: "Some people dislike to call it the Itch, but I have had it many, many times. It however cured me after many other remedies had failed. A box completed the cure—the first application afforded wonderful relief. My advice to those who have to scratch is to use Hunt's Salve."

Hunt's Salve is a special compound for the treatment of Itch, Eczema, Ringworm, Tinea, and other Itching skin diseases, and is sold on our guarantee locally only by

GUARD AGAINST APPENDICITIS

Appendicitis is caused by poisons from decaying food in the bowels. Many people have a bowel movement every day, but it is not a COMPLETE movement and much old, stale matter stays in the system to ferment and cause trouble. The trouble is only a small passage in the center of bowels while the sides are covered with old, hard matter which stays in the bowels. Bowels are constipated. Old, hard waste matter sticking to the sides of the bowels overpowers the system for months, making you tired all the time and "half-sick."

Don't allow this old, fermenting stuff to stay in your bowels. Get GEDETT and keep it out. Even if your bowels move slightly each day, that is not enough. There must be an occasional THOROUGH, complete cleaning out of all the accumulated decaying waste matter.

COMPLETE SYSTEM CLEANSEER

The most COMPLETE system cleanse known is a mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, and other ingredients put up in ready to use form under the name of Adler-i-ka. This mixture is so thorough and complete that it effectively moves foul and poisonous matter which other cathartic or laxative mixtures are unable to dislodge. It loosens and dissolves foul matter sticking to the sides of the intestines, working without the least discomfort or trouble. It is so gentle that one forgets he has taken it until the system is clean and healthy.

It is astonishing the great amount of foul, poisonous matter ONE SPOONFUL of Adler-i-ka draws from the alimentary canal—matter you would never have thought was in your system. Try it right after a natural bowel movement to determine how much MORE foul matter will be brought out which was poisoning your system. In slight discomfort, take a spoonful of Adler-i-ka, "gas on the stomach, or sick headache, ONE spoonful always brings relief. Adler-i-ka is used only on those people to whom such medicines and the various oils and waters.

REPORTS FROM PHYSICIANS.

Adler-i-ka is in my practice and have found nothing to excel it.

(Signed) Dr. W. A. Line.

"I have been very successful with Adler-i-ka. Some cases require only one dose." (Signed) Dr. F. M. Pretzman.

"I have found nothing in my 50 years practice to exceed Adler-i-ka."

"One of our leading doctors has used Adler-i-ka in cases of stomach trouble with wonderful success. He has not had a patient and saved many operations." (Signed) Dr. D. Hawkins.

"I had bad stomach trouble. After taking Adler-i-ka I feel better than I have for years. I can eat and digest better. The language which were eliminated from my system." (Signed) J. E. Puckett.

"I have had Adler-i-ka. I was sick all night, something I could not do for years." (Signed) Mrs. E. Noblett.

"I could not eat well. I had a bad case of constipation. Adler-i-ka made me feel better and am now able to work and gain." (Signed) Mrs. L. A. Austin.

Adler-i-ka is sold by leading druggists every-where. Write for free book about appendicitis.

50 HOUSES For RENT

HAVE YOU ARRANGED FOR A HOME to be occupied by September 1st? If not, file your application IN WRITING with us. We are going to scour the city for houses to rent, and you may be fortunate enough to secure a home through our office. We will make it our business to search the city for you, and you will be assured a number of bedrooms required and the section of the city in which you prefer to live. Please make it plain that you mean business, and we will work for you with all our energy.

Address or call with MR. W. W. GARDNER, Manager Department of Rents, Loans and Insurance. He has exclusive charge of this department.

Homes for Sale.

I SUGGEST THAT YOU CONFER WITH US right away, if you want to buy a home. You must know how quick September 1st will be here. If you own a bank note due then you will spend a mighty short summer.

Good Business Property for Sale

PETERS STREET—Just north of the new motor truck plant of the Kleber Bros. we are offering a lot 100x200, with an alley on the side, and running back to Ellis street in the rear, for $10,000. This figures 50¢ per square foot. We know of nothing between this property and Five Points that can be purchased at anything like this price. There is a side track just across Peters street, where it is possible to have cars placed giving practically the same service as having trackage in the property. There is an old 2-story house on this lot at the present, the rent from which will pay taxes until such time as one might improve.

SPRING STREET—When Spring street is paved, the block bound by Spring, Hunnicutt, Scott and Parker streets will be one of the most desirable large blocks of land on the street. It fronts 200 feet on Spring and extends back an even width 160 feet to Scott street, having 32,000 square feet of ground area. This amount of land with permanent light, air and ventilation on four sides would be a most desirable place for a large automobile concern or any type of business requiring large floor space with plenty of unobstructed light. Price, $60,000. Terms reasonable.

FORREST AVENUE—On the southeast corner of Courtland street, fronting 100 feet on Courtland and 111 feet on Forrest avenue, there is at the present time a good residence that could with small cost be converted into a suitable building for the use of doctors. Quite a number of the homes on Forrest avenue, between Peachtree and Piedmont ave., have been converted into offices by doctors, and this corner is the only one of the four on Courtland and Forrest that we know of that can be purchased. Price, $43,000.

PEACHTREE STREET—A Peachtree lot with frontage on another street cannot often be purchased at a reasonable price. We have a lot an average depth of 230 feet, running through to Alexander street, that we can sell for $1,250 per front foot. This is below the market, and a good speculation. A one-story store on this lot would pay a good interest return.

NEW TRIAL FOR GREEN TO BE ASKED MONDAY

Mrs. Catherine Queen Bradstreet to Be Brought to Trial August 11.

According to attorneys on both sides of the case, Mrs. Catherine Queen Bradstreet, who is accused with William B. Green, former vice president of the Fairburn Banking company, will be tried August 11, on the same embezzlement charges.

Since the arrest of Mrs. Bradstreet, who was living in style at a fashionable local hotel, about a year ago, the affairs of Mrs. Bradstreet and Green, who was convicted recently of embezzlement and sentenced to serve five years in the penitentiary, have been before the public eye.

Mrs. Bradstreet before her arrest owned several motor cars, a large assortment of diamonds and expensive clothing including many costly furs. She is accused of having her father in running a grocery store on North Boulevard. Green, who is out on $40,000 bond since his conviction last April, has been paroled three times at the home of his mother.

Attorneys for Green will ask for a new trial at a hearing to be held Monday before Judge John B. Hutchison, of the Stone Mountain circuit. Green's petition asks for a new trial on twenty-one counts. The trial of Mrs. Bradstreet and Green will not be brought to trial, the women of Fairburn circulated a petition calling on the authorities to see that the case against her was not pursued.

In regard to the case, Solicitor George M. Naper said: "I have received the petition and my answer is that the 'Bradstreet' case has been set for trial on August 11, the state has entered into no agreement whatsoever to hinder prosecution of this case. So far as I know there is nothing that will keep the case from coming to trial."

Fred Harrison, one of Mrs. Bradstreet's attorneys, Saturday morning, was emphatic in his assertion that Mrs. Bradstreet will go on trial August 11. He stated that Judge Hutchison had served notice on the defense that they must be ready at that date and that they were ready. Attorney Harrison stated that Mrs. Bradstreet had moved from her father's old home at Panthersville to a place larger and better, and with her husband and father is running a grocery store.

Judge Hutchison stated that he had been in touch with him to be ready for trial when the case is tried. The night after Green's conviction, said Judge Hutchison, "I set Mr. Bradstreet a trial date, a trial date for August 11, which is criminal week in Campbell county. The case could not be heard in April because of the trial of Green the entire week."

However, when the case is tried the state will conduct the prosecution and the defense will be assisted by attorneys who assisted in the prosecution of the case against Green. It is understood that the state entered into an agreement with the defense that Mrs. Bradstreet if she would make a satisfactory settlement. She made this agreement with the defense for a new trial was to have been heard Saturday. Attorney H. A. Allen, of Green's counsel, furnished the press with a copy of the amendment petition for new trial. The case was postponed only because of the absence from the court of Judge George Westmoreland, leading judge for Green. It is understood that Judge Westmoreland will be back in the city Monday and the hearing will be had.

Green's petition for a new trial was set out that the court erred in admitting evidence that he was brought by the bank against Green. The petition terms this action of the court "dignifying a lot of wild and reckless allegations" by calling them real evidence.

The petition declares that the court erred several times in its charge to the jury in its definition of the elements and it is prejudiced the jury in an unfairly against the defendant in several instances.

Testimony will be taken before a special commissioner in Fairburn next Thursday in the proceedings against Green and Mrs. Green to determine their two over to the receiver the Green home in Fairburn, which they have declined to do on demand. The Green's assert title to the home through fees declared to have been executed by George Green, brother of the defendant.

WRIGHT WINNER
ON ARBITRATION

Comptroller General William A. Wright won a complete victory in his first arbitration trial, arbitration of this year yesterday, when the arbitrators upheld his assessment of $1,200,000 in the value of the franchise in Georgia of the American Railway Express company. E. W. Moseley, of Atlanta, the company's attorney, Chairman C. Murphy Candier, of the railroad commission, acted for the state, and former Attorney General Warren A. Grice of Macon was amicus curiae.

Last year General Wright assessed the franchise of the American Railway Express company at $500,000, and for the year 1918 and were allowed a reduction of $100,000. This year General Wright fixed the assessment at $250,000, the amount assessed by the year arbitration board, while the company claimed a nominal valuation of $1.

Morris & Co. agreed to accept its assessment of $12,000 before the arbitration board could meet Saturday.

SIMMS CONDEMNS AUTOMOBILE VIEW OF BANK GOVERNOR

Refuting the attitude of the governor of the Federal Reserve bank of Atlanta that the automobile is a luxury and that the industry is a non-essential one, Jackson H. Simms, well known in local automobile circles, declared yesterday that if Governor Wilbourn had taken more time to acquaint himself with the automobile, he would probably have been more cautious in making such a reckless condemnation of this industry.

Mr. Simms' statement is that the automobile industry is highly beneficial to the nation. Mr. Simms gave out the following statistics: That the automobile bank of Atlanta has a capital of $1,250,000,000, which is greater by $250,000,000 than the capitalization of all the National banks, which, in 1917, was $1,079,000,000. The automobile industry amounts to an excess of $747,000,000 which is 2 1/4 times the gross revenue of the post office, which is $29,726,116.

Mr. Simms' calls attention to the fact that farmers use more than 200,000 automobiles. The automobile has the advantage of the automobile over the horse is pointed out by his statement that the disappearance of the automobile would make necessary to increase our horse population by 25,000,000, it requiring five acres to feed a horse, which would mean an additional 125,000,000 acres may be used.

It really becomes ridiculous in being called upon to defend such an industry that has benefited humanity so much, the product of which has been a flag-bearer in the progress of civilization.

Mr. Simms states that the opinion of the governor of the Federal Reserve bank in Atlanta is not the opinion of other bankers, who have a thorough knowledge of the industry and are experienced in its several phases.

The word "aviator" has been coined to designate those who navigate naval aircraft.

The secretary was instructed to send greetings to absent classmate, viz: Hon. Charles L. Bartlett, Macon, Ga.; Dr. W. H. B. Nevin, Atlanta, Ga.; Edward C. Long, San Antonio, Texas; Dr. R. B. Nevitt, Toronto, Canada; J. E. Pendergraft, Atlanta, Ga.; John E. Strong, Montezuma, Ga.; John E. Strong, LaGrange, Ga.; Dr. George W. Vines, Dadeville, Ala.; Dr. R. W. Westmoreland, Atlanta, Ga.; R. S. Woolfolk, Perry, Ga.

SHOWERS FOR TODAY, STATES FORECASTER

More rain for Sunday was the word received from the weather man Saturday after a good drenching which he served Atlanta during the afternoon.

A general high pressure of atmosphere from the east made points favorable to a period of moderate temperatures in Georgia.

Judge Hutchison stated that he had been in touch with him to be ready for trial when the case is tried.

The night after Green's conviction, said Judge Hutchison, "I set

Mr. Bradstreet a trial date, a trial date for August 11, which is criminal week in Campbell county. The case could not be heard in April because of the trial of Green the entire week."

Trimble Kiddie Koops

"If it isn't made by Trimble, it isn't a Kiddie Koop."

No one single piece of furniture admits of greater use than the Kiddie Koop. For convenience in caring for Baby, as well as for the genuine comfort of the child, it has no equal.

What you get when you buy a Trimble Kiddie Koop is in reality three distinct and necessary objects—

Bassinet—Crib—Play Pen.

These are combined into one—and you get them for the price of a good crib.

Some other points of convenience—

By simple manipulation the wheels may be made stationary or swivel.

The board floor converts the Kiddie Koop into a play-pen.

May be easily fitted with canopy top—offering protection from wind and sun.

The screen cover keeps the baby in and insects out.

Gilliland—McCollum.

A beautiful event of Wednesday evening, June 30, taking place at 8 o'clock, was the marriage of Miss Eunice Catherine Gilliland and Mr. William Roy McCollum at the Woodward Avenue Baptist church, Rev. T. T. Davis officiating.

The artistic decorations were palm, ferns, pink and white gladioli.

A delightful musical program was rendered by Mrs. Charles Boring, of Dallas, Mrs. June before the ceremony entered. Mrs. A. H. Martin sang.

The bride and her attendants entered to the music of the band, followed by the bride.

Miss Annie Lou Gilliland, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and was dressed in a dress of pink georgette and lace.

Miss Lois Bell, of Atlanta, was the maid of honor, was beautiful in her gown of pink georgette elaborately embroidered. She carried a shower bouquet of pink and white sweet peas tied with tulle.

The little ribbon-bearers were Marie Baker, of Elizabeth, and Mrs. Elizabeth Lou Gilliland, of Elizabeth, and Mrs. Baker and Marvin Louis Martin in suits of white.

The little flower girls, Mildred Smith, cousin of the bride, and Thelma Tuggee, wore white organdy and each carried a basket of sweet peas and snapdragons.

The bride, Miss Gilliland, and Miss Lois Bell, of Atlanta, who carried the ring in a white rose, wore a dainty suit of white satin.

The ushers were Messrs. H. T. Stoddard and L. H. Moore.

The bride entered on the arm of her uncle, Mr. M. V. Barnett, and was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Mr. Goss.

The bride was handsome in her wedding gown of white duchess satin trimmed with point lace and her embroidery. The veil was caught with a wreath of orange blossoms. Her only ornament was a necklace of pearls and her bouquet was bride's roses showered with violets.

The mother of the bride wore a gown of gray crepe mete, combed with georgette.

A large reception followed at the home of the bride's parents, Mrs. S. O. Gilliland, and later in the evening Mr. and Mrs. McCollum left for their summer home in the Bronx, N. Y., New York City, Atlantic City, Philadelphia and other points of interest. They will be at home to their friends after August 1 at 456 West Georgia, Atlanta.

The out-of-town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. McCollum, of Marietta, Ga.; Mr. and Mrs. E. McCollum, of Etowah, Tenn.; Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Harrelson, and Miss Letta Harrison, of Charlotte, N. C.; Mr. Eric R. Johnson, of Carrollton, Ga.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Johnson, of Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thomas, and Miss Annie Ruth Thomas, of Knoxville, Tenn.; Mr. W. N. The "Gown of the Moment"

Described by Local Artist

"The 'Gown of the moment,' and the one which in a very few weeks will be the most important in a woman's wardrobe, is the one an average woman does not think of unless she is reminded of it," de- clare Miss Virginia Bowie, one of Atlanta's leading artists, when asked at this period of the summer, "I should describe the 'gown of the moment,' as the one which has the prettiness, airiness in fashion, and the texture of durability," she con-

"It is the one a woman puts on at a moment's notice, if a hurried call for a social ride is proposed to her when there is no time to get a end of the trip, or dinner at a motor inn, or a far-out country club.

"If asked what would be the best material for such a gown, I find myself picturing my imagination in the present day chintzes or georgettes, which are printed on black, dark blue or taupe backgrounds.

"The flowers are in the prettiness, and lights of summer, with a substantial background—a color that is consistent with the first fall days, when the greens in the fall begin to be softened, and now when the reds and lights show in the leaves.

Another material pretty

in the darker colors, but lightened in the white Swiss, and colored or lingerie trimmings or some bright contrasting color in the colture or sash or girdle."

"I see smart early fall frocks appropriate for many occasions

now—in dark blue silk, with sash lining or piping, or a touch of certain or the petunia, or dahlia shades."

"I see black taffeta gowns touched up with some bright color, and I see taupes and dark browns

more substantial gowns of the moment, and those designed to be worn when it is too late for organza and Swiss, and too soon for velvet, satin, and orgaple, and the fashion prophets tell of that it is going to be a season

The Masterpiece of Piano Craftsmanship

With its presence in the home is associated a degree of musical discrimination such as is suggested in the ownership of no other Piano in the world.

The marked predominance it has enjoyed for more than Sixty-five Years as the choice of the great pianists—of those whose homes command the unqualified best—and the fact that but more firmly establishes its superior worth, furnish striking and conclusive evidence of its pre-eminence.

If you're an instrument you would consider exchanging, come in or phone us (Ivy 891). We will be glad to give you free estimate of allowance.

Younger Set in Society Enjoy Club Life and Motoring

Social Circles Will Soon Lose Popular Members

The debutante, the sub-debutante and those of last season, and those preceding, are enjoying the Atlanta summer season. They may mention the hot days, but they forget it during the cool nights which follow in the many ways in which the social program carries them. The social clubs contribute continually to the pleasure of the stay-at-homes.

On Tuesday and Thursday evenings there are large assemblies on the roof garden at the Capital City club, and on Saturday evenings they are seen at the Piedmont Driving club and the East Lake Country club. Motor rides frequently have an intermission in an hour spent on the club roof garden or at either one of the country clubs, with Brookhaven having a steady patronage in the afternoon and evening.

The younger society set will soon lose some of its brightest members, among them Miss Catherine Sanders, who leaves July 14 for a visit west with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Paine and Miss Douglas Paine. They will go as far as Alaska, returning home in early September. Miss Mary Faith Yow is in Laponia for the summer, where she has been entertaining. It will be good news to her friends to learn that she will return to Atlanta in the early fall and be with Governor and Mrs. Dorsey for the winter. Miss Julia Brantley is at her home in Blackshear after having spent most of the winter with her sister, Mrs. James Ragan. She will visit the east later, and will spend the early fall and winter in Atlanta.

Miss Blanche Devine and her cousin, Miss Mabel, of Birmingham, will join her mother, Mrs. Emily Carter Devine, and her aunt, Mrs. Mabel, at Carters, Ga., the old plantation of the Carter family for many generations.

Piedmont Driving Club.

The dinner-dance at the Piedmont Driving club was a beautiful event last night, and there were a number of large parties.

Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Hawkins entertained in honor of Mrs. St. Julian Ravenel, of New York, who is the guest of her mother, Mrs. Thomas M. Clark. In the party were: Mrs. Ravenel, Mr. and Mrs. Lowry Arnold, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Clark, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Peters and Mr. Jackson P. Dick, all of Atlanta, and Mrs. E. E. Hawkins entertained in compliment to Dr. and Mrs. Floyd W. McRae, Jr. Invited to meet them were: Dr. and Mrs. William Schanberger, Dr. and Mrs. Montague Boyd, and Mr. and Mrs. James Ragan.

Miss Caroline Fagan, of New York, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Meador, was a guest in a party including Misses Fagan, Charlotte Meador, Hallie Crawford and Nellie Dodd. Misses M. Harris, Evelyn Thompson, Leman, Phoebe Homer, Thompson, Forney, Wylie and Henry Walker Bagley.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Daniel, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Meador, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Haine and Mr. J. H. Nunnally formed a party.

Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Holt, Mr. and Mrs. John C. and Mrs. William Dickey, Mr. Herman Riddell and others entertained small parties.

Return.

Colonel and Mrs. William Lawson Peel have returned from a delightful visit to Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and New York. They first visited their daughter, Mrs. Watts, at the family home of Virginia, where Doctor and Mrs. Watts have a beautiful home. Later they went to Hot Springs, Va., and from there to Washington, where they were the guests of General and Mrs. Waldman Park Inn of their friends, Mr. and Mrs. W. Hubbard, of Baltimore.

They visited Annapolis and later the Maryland home of Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard to the latter's home in Baltimore and later to their suburban home on the east coast of Maryland. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard have an extensive estate there and Col. and Mrs. Peel motored with them to the most interesting places in that section of the country, ending in Wilmington, Delaware, where the party was entertained by many friends, among them Mr. and Mrs. Dupont, who reside in the old Piermont Inn. The party is the most historically beautiful and extensive in the state. Later Colonel and Mrs. Peel spent ten days in New York.

Miss Carter to Wed
Mr. Bowvier.

In the July 15 number of Vogue there appeared a charming picture of Miss Eluned Carroll, Dillingham Carter, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dillingham, of Baltimore, New York and Philadelphia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry Carter, of Baltimore, and a granddaughter of the late Mr. Edward Carter, also a first cousin of Lady Acheson, of London.

Miss Carter's engagement to Mr. John Vernon Bowvier, III, was announced April 1, 1920. Mr. Bowvier, Yale graduate, served in the aviation corps during the war. The bride-elect is a niece of Major and Mrs. Dillingham, who are prominent in Atlanta. Mrs. Dillingham was a Miss Dillingham, of Virginia. Major Dillingham is stationed at Camp Gordon.

Mrs. Hays Takes Vacation.

Mrs. J. E. Hays, president of the Georgia Federation of Women's clubs, is taking her vacation in rather active parts.

She leaves her home in Montezuma, Ga., every morning at six-thirty o'clock and goes to her peach farm, and remains there until six in the evening. She returns home after a busy day. In the absence of her husband, Mrs. Hays superintends the crating of the peaches for shipment overseas, the work of the cannery plant, which is one of the most progressive private plants in the state.

She is studious of all the new methods of canning and preserving, believing it to be a department of farming which is so easily accomplished by women, especially during the winter months. The old duties along organized lines are not so active. Mrs. Hays attended the biennial of the general federation of women's clubs in Atlanta, and remained to observe the many interesting features of that meeting.

She is especially satisfied with the progress of the women's winter of Minneapolis, who has for many years rendered valuable service to federated interests, and who is a distinguished writer and speaker. Mrs. Hays spoke at the

The woman in business is usually referred to as a business woman, but in this case she is rather a settler of problems, civic and personal.

One woman's home was located near the center of a small town noted for tourists looking in vain for a comfortable place to park. She is going to go back to her quiet way, and done the work a good turn, even as she wrought her living from it.

Party of Georgians,
Led by Mrs. Jordan,
To Tour the West

Mrs. Harvie Jordan will chaperon her young daughter, Evelyn Jordan, and party of twenty girls on a trip west. They leave Atlanta August 7 and will be gone 36 days.

The story of the trip is an interesting one. Miss Jordan, when she decided to go west, talked of it among her friends, and one by one they began writing, asking to join the party.

So many were the requests, Mrs. Jordan saw she had to reserve a Pullman for the party. This she did, and soon seventeen girls from all parts of the state had joined the party.

There is room for four more in Mrs. Jordan's Pullman, and then the party will have all the car to themselves.

In the party with Mrs. Jordan and her daughter are Misses Maud Bullock, Athens; Bee Porter, Atlanta; Diddle and Nanette Barber, Greenville, Ga.; Sadie Sibley and Mary Tate, Marietta; Jeannette Ashe, of Athens; Elizabeth Barrett, Monroe; Virginia Latimer, Comer, Ga.; Lucille Arrington, Augusta; Mana Robinson, Monroe; Edith Campbell, Atlanta; Sara Rendell, Greenville; Alice Chandler, Katie Bell Miller, Athens.

The party go from Atlanta to Chicago over the Canadian Pacific to Vancouver, Seattle, Portland. There will be a stopover at San Francisco, and motor to San Diego and over the Mexican line to Tia Juana. The party comes back through the middle west, visiting Yellowstone Park, Colorado Springs, Salt Lake City, Denver and St. Louis.

Silver Tea.

The ladies' Bible class of Grant Park church will entertain the ladies of Atlanta churches, Tuesday afternoon, July 15, at the home of Mrs. J. H. Garner, 19 Rosalia street, from 4 to 6 o'clock.

Adelphian Club Dance.

The Adelphian club will give their regular dance Thursday evening, July 15, at the club rooms, 217½ Peachtree street. A special musical program has been arranged.

For Mrs. Banton.

Mrs. Anna Banton entered yesterday afternoon at matinees party in honor of her sister, Mrs. Howard S. Banton, of Birmingham, Ala.

Those invited were Miss Fannie L. Mitchell, Miss Mary Ellen Gathright, Mrs. Hattie McLean, Mrs. J. R. Banton and Miss Madeline Banton.

Mrs. Green Hostess.

Mrs. Henry Haines Green was honored on Wednesday afternoon by the members of her bridge club at her home in Inman Park. The prize for top score was won by Mrs. J. R. Childs and the cut prize by Mrs. John E. B. Childs.

The guests were Mrs. O. F. Whitten, Mrs. J. S. Bloodworth, Mrs. M. O. Nix, Mrs. J. R. Childs, Mrs. J. W. Reed, Mrs. J. O. B. Goodwin, Jr., and Mrs. B. T. T. T. T.

Kendley-Dodd.

Mr. and Mrs. George F. Kendley announced the marriage of their daughter, Maude Muller, to Mr. Clarence Fleetwood Dodd. The ceremony was performed by Dean Thomas H. Johnston.

Palmer-Stickel.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Palmer announce the marriage of their daughter, Eleanor, to Mr. Gordon Stickel on July 3. Dr. Charles W. Daniel officiating.

PORWOOD-PATRICK.

Of interest to a number of friends throughout the state was the marriage of Miss Anna Newt Portwood to Mr. Corry Patrick, of Cochran, which was solemnized Wednesday afternoon, July 7, at four o'clock at the home of the bride, Dr. O. P. Portwood, in Crawfordville, Ga., the Rev. J. E. O'Quin officiating.

The house was beautifully decorated.

Preceding the ceremony Mrs. J. A. Beasley rendered a violin solo.

Mrs. Alvin Golucke sang, and the organ was played by Miss Patay Patrick.

Little Miss Edith Trotter was ring bearer.

The bride wore a becoming travois suit of tan silk noire twill, with a small hat of dark brown straw harmonizing with the suit wonderfully. She carried a shower bouquet of white Killarney roses and swansons.

An informal reception was given immediately after the ceremony.

Guests Estelle Reid, Mary Bristow, Louise Tucker, Caroline Gee and Evelyn Asbury and Mrs. Clem Gunn.

Mrs. O. P. Portwood and Mrs.

Elouise Portwood formed the receiving party.

Out-of-town guests were: Mr.

Jenkins—McKay.

An unusually pretty wedding was celebrated Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the home of Mr. J. P.

Downing on Candler street in Kirkwood, when Miss Rubie McKay, of

Russell Lawrence Jenkins, of Birmingham, Ala. The ceremony was performed in the spacious living room before an improvised altar of ferns intertwined with white flowers. In the center was a large candleholder with numerous other candles interspersed. The bridal party, to the strains of Lohengrin's played by Miss Geftrude Mims, entered through a aisle formed by the following ribbon bearers: Little Jean Patrick, Madge Merrell and Misses Laura Cooper, Jessie Setzer, Opal Carmichael and Mary Annie Smith. The maid of honor and bridesmaid carried the rings in tall silver candlesticks.

Miss Mamie McKay, of Washington, D. C., sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and Misses Downing best man. Miss Hattie Hood, as bridesmaid, entered the room with Mr. Robert M. Barnes. Both maid of honor and bridesmaid wore pink organdie and carried baskets of pink sweetpeas. The little ring bearer, Mary Love, wore pink organdie and carried the rings in a huge magnolia white organdie with big picture hat and carrying a shower bouquet of ferns and swansons, entered on the arm of the bride. The double ring ceremony was impressively performed by Rev. J. S. Sewell.

Immediately after the ceremony an informal reception was ended. The color scheme of pink and white was carried out in the decorations of the dining room and refreshments. Glasses Smith and Setzer served punch from a bower on the front porch.

The bridal pair were the recipients of many lovely gifts which testify as to their popularity and taste.

Out-of-town guests were Mrs. J. M. Patrick, mother of the bride, and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Kendrick and Miss Cleo Kendrick, of Sharon, Ga., Mrs. W. H.

Patrick and Miss Fatsy Patrick, of Newborn, Ga., Mrs. L. A. Sheahan

Breck-Johns.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Breck announced the marriage of their daughter, Dorothy Louise, to Mr. Jeff W. Johns of Eatonton, Ga., on the evening of July 8.

Mrs. Leonard Entertains.

The E. S. Rook club was entertained at the home of Mrs. Charles M. Leonard on Metropolitan avenue, last Friday afternoon.

Several tables of Rook were played on the large porch, which was adorned with geraniums and ferns and scarlet geraniums.

Mrs. John Townly and Mrs. J. S. Wilson won the prizes for top score; Mrs. Scott and Mrs. Ophelia Owen the consolation prizes.

A delicious ice cream was served.

Mrs. R. Willis Heard, of Savannah, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Thornton Marye.

Messrs. Clark and Comet Howell are at home in the Ponce de Leon apartments during the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Howell in the West.

Mr. J. B. Whitehead, of New York, is in the city.

A regular meeting of East Atlanta chapter, No. 108, O. E. S., will be held next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. Important business. All members are urged to be present.

W. A. Brady is to present a play with Margaret Anglin on the life of Andrew Jackson, called "Old Hickory." With Lee Shubert, Mr. Brady will present a play called "The Heiress."

A delicious ice cream was served.

To Overcome Redness, Tan, Freckles, Blotches

If your skin is usually reddened, tanned or freckled, just dab a little pure mercurized wax on the face and allow it to remain over night. When you wash off the wax in the morning, fine freckles almost disappear. The entire skin is cleaned of all dirt and impurities. Repeating this daily, the entire outer skin is absorbed, but so gradually and gently, that there is not the slightest redness or inflammation. Even the stubborn freckles are affected. The underlying skin which forms the complexion is so clear, smooth and radiant-looking, that all the transformation is the only thing known to actually discard an aged, faded, wrinkled, yellowish complexion. One ounce of mercurized wax, procurable at any drug store, is sufficient in most cases. (adv.)

Alkali in Shampoos Bad For Washing Hair

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is Milled coconut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair is left soft, even, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff. (adv.)

SAY "DIAMOND DYES"

Don't streak or ruin your material in a poor dye. Insist on "Diamond Dyes." Easy directions in every package.

GIRLS! MAKE A LEMON BLEACH

Lemons Whiten and Double Beauty of the Skin

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which can be had at any drug store, shake well and you have a quarter pint of harmless and delightful lemon bleach for few cents.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day, then shortly note the beauty of your skin.

Famous stage beauties use lemon juice to bleach and brighten their rosily-white complexion. Lemons have always been used as a freckle, sunburn and tan remover. Make this up and try it. (adv.)

A Simple Way to Remove Dandruff

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid soap from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the fingers.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff, will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve any remaining dandruff. It is soap and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and disagreeable sensations will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better—(advice).

Worth up to $69.75 to sell for $39.50

These handsome dresses are a special purchase made by Mr. J. S. Field, who is now in New York on a buying trip. They were bought from two of the best known manufacturers in the country and were rushed to us by parcel post, having just arrived Saturday morning. They are the very latest word in fashion and must be seen to be appreciated.

There's a long wearing season ahead for dresses, so FIELD'S has done what its patrons expected—brought them handsome garments at extraordinary reductions at a time when they will be most welcome. Imagine Tricolette and Georgette dresses that are worth up to $69.75 being sold at the price we are asking Monday!

There are beautiful navies and browns, with other fashionable shades, with silk cords, sashes, dainty vestees of silk or heavy laces. Some of the Georgette models have pretty collars, and are handsomely beaded and silk embroidered. The Tricolette models are embellished elaborately with beads and silk embroidered motifs—but descriptions are so feeble—SEE THEM!

... CURRENT EVENTS FROM A WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW ...

By ISMA DOOLY

Is the New Girl Arriving?

Is the "new girl" arriving, one is impelled to ask between the expressions of different kinds which have been addressed to the young woman of the present day by university presidents, women leaders, reformers and newspaper writers in search of sensations. For many years now the general cry has been disapproval toward the modern ways and methods of the young woman of the day, and especially lately toward her aimless life, her lack of dignity in manners, dress and habits and her carelessness toward chaperonage.

She has presented the decided extreme between the type of fifty years ago, when her voice was so gentle it could scarcely be heard above the rustle of the crinoline in her skirt which formed a barricade about her figure form and grace, while the type of today is so decidedly the other extreme in scantiness and brevity of skirt and the thinness and economy of corsege and other raiment.

Thoughtlessness has been the general term applied to the present day product, and this thoughtlessness has been so all pervading there has been the general question being directed toward the women of the nation: "Where are the mothers?"

Now comes the story of a very young Atlanta woman who still has one more year of college work to be done, who is home for her vacation with the social program of the average girl before her, but who deliberately goes to one of the leading banks of the city and asks for a position during the summer months.

Her youth, the delicacy of her beauty and the prominence of her family were at once against her in the eyes of the bank employer, and, mistaking her application as a girlish whim, she was at first told that there was no place for her.

She had made the frank statement in her application that she did not have to work in the sense of earning wage; that her father was willing and able to take care of her in every way, but that she knew the expenses of her college, with its tuition, and the accessory expenses of books, sorority obligations, etc., and she thought that she could just as well be keeping herself in studious trim during the summer by working and earning some of the money for her college expenses.

A few days after her application she received a note recalling her to the bank, and a position was offered to her. She accepted it, and is doing exceedingly well. Her employers are delighted with her accomplishment and particularly impressed by her dignity and by her fidelity to duty. The work hours are such that she has ample time for recreation in the afternoons and evenings, and above all, she is so happy in being occupied and interested in what she is doing. She will return to her college in the fall.

Does this young woman illustrate the swinging of the pendulum which will bring a new girl—one who will bring back some of the old-time dignity and gentle womanliness of the olden time and still hold with it the buoyancy and joy of youth.

This particular young woman represents on both sides of her family the best which has been produced by the "Old and the New South." In her delicate features can be traced the resemblance to the face of her aristocratic grandmothers whose portraits adorn the walls. She may be said to represent a return to that thoughtfulness women once had, which surely is not unbecoming even in the youngest and happiest of women.

What she is doing is so interesting there will be many who will watch her career with an admiring scrutiny and hope that such thoughtfulness will extend itself into every phase of the life of a certain large element of today's young women.

Disappointed Scribes.

One cannot but detect a note of disappointment in the articles from the special writers who went to San Francisco with their searchlights out for sensational incidents in which women were expected to figure. It was known that there would be a large delegation of women; that they would be there working for suffrage as well as in the interest of the democratic party, and they were expected to produce types to delight the feature writer and the cartoonist. But instead of that there was almost a monotony, it would seem, in well poised, well conducted, well gowned women.

There were no Carrie Nations, no short-haired women with deep masculine voices, nor, on the other hand, no easily startled females who would run from a mouse. One does not read that shapeless frocks or queer frocks were worn, that shoes were large and unduly flat-heeled, or that women carried umbrellas under their arms or distributed tracts.

No one hears that any woman who spoke was rapped down because she spoke too long; no woman talked out of turn or tried to talk where she was not acceptable.

When they held women's conferences and disagreed they did not quarrel, but argued it out, and settled it about as men settle theirs. The matter was tabled or the majority got what it wanted.

It was a very mediocre statement one writer made, that Mrs. George Bass, the chairman of the woman's democratic committee, had won the third day of the convention what she had won the two previous days—a black tailor suit and a becoming close-fitting blue blouse. If he had looked carefully he might have noted that Mrs. Bass had beautifully small and shapely feet and that she always wears good foot gear, though she is an advocate of thrift.

Not even that clever writer, Edna Ferber, produced any sensation, even after she penetrated the bedroom of Elizabeth Marbury before eight in the morning to interview her on prohibition. Miss Ferber had to acknowledge she found the woman leader from New York in bed eating her breakfast and wearing a blue breakfast jacket and a lace cap with blue bows on it.

What could have been more normal and proper than this proceeding on the part of a woman, even if she were a leader and advocated a "wet" plank in the platform?

The truth is the scribes, and, indeed, the world might as well understand that a woman has a right everywhere that the affairs of the nation are being discussed. Every woman of them in San Francisco, sent there as a delegate or to attend some specific piece of business, was probably more earnestly on her job than the average man was.

It is, in a way, something new to her, and she saw it as a responsibility. There are going to be women politicians, women office-seekers and women appointed to satisfy the constituencies of many men, but for the present the women which women are going to choose to represent them are going to be as near the standard as it is possible for women to be.

The women who were sent to California were of that type—they were up to the standard, and conscientious about what they were doing.

That is the reason there was so little funny stuff for the scribes to write—those who wrote justly and who truthfully interpreted the attitude and acts of the representative women in San Francisco.

National Committeewoman

Mrs. Frank P. McIntyre, new democratic national committeewoman from Georgia.

Mrs. Frank P. McIntyre, of Savannah, who has been elected national committeewoman for Georgia by the Georgia delegates at the democratic convention, has been identified for a number of years with progressive movements in her own city and throughout the state.

The recognition of her ability which this appointment indicates is no surprise to those who have followed her, although she is still young, woman and a very busy one as far as home activities are concerned, being the mother of four children, and a country teacher in the Kinston schools, which supports a tuberculosis visiting nurse, maintains a children's free clinic and co-operates with other organizations doing allied work.

In addition to her home duties and those outside interests, which she regards as nothing, related to the work, Mrs. McIntyre finds time for an interesting social life, keeps up warm intimacies with her girlhood friends and has leisure for the welfare movements and civic health movements in general. She has warm support. She has been actively associated with a local chapter of the Kress Foundation, which supports a tuberculosis visiting nurse, maintains a children's free clinic and co-operates with other organizations doing allied work.

She has exhibited in handling the local organization.

But although suffrage has been Mrs. McIntyre's principal work, it is by no means the only one that she has successfully undertaken. She is vice president of the Savannah Women's Federation and is in touch with all of its varied activities, attending all of its public meetings and is always called on when enthusiasm, good judgment, clear ideas, quick thinking and resourcefulness are needed.

Child welfare movements and civic health movements in general have her warm support. She has been actively associated with a local chapter of the Kress Foundation, which supports a tuberculosis visiting nurse, maintains a children's free clinic and co-operates with other organizations doing allied work.

The decision of the Atlanta chapter to feature public health work on its permanent program is giving general satisfaction to Red Cross workers throughout the country in discussing the plans of work.

The executive board investigated the permanent work undertaken by the Red Cross in the various sections of the country, and the great majority of chapters have adopted public health service.

"We saw a definite need for the work, especially on the plane which the chapter has inaugurated.

"There are many people who in illness desire the aid of a trained nurse but are not afford to pay the regular price, but who still would not accept the service as a gift.

"The nominal price of 55 cents a visit which will be charged by our eight trained nurses removed this obstacle or prejudice and we see in the system a new factor in relief in the public health program."

Co-operation With Other Agencies.

"Our public health service will be entered into in cooperation with the city public health department and that of other public health agencies, and we hope to get our nursing service in operation before the year is over. Further said Mrs. Thornton.

"Our nursing service will in no way conflict with any Red Cross work which the Red Cross holds itself in readiness to perform at any time.

Was It Chivalry or Chicanery?

In a progressive city in the central south the active women of the community worked for and established a public market, urging the farmers in the vicinity to bring in their products; that they would be purchased cheerfully, thus saving to the women the profits of the middle man and thereby reducing the high cost of living.

These enterprising farmers who had small stock and aching for a large patronage, arrived in town early enough to go to the commission merchants, who always act on the philosophy that the "early bird catches the worm," and there purchased produce to supplement the Milk for the Babies Agitates World Women.

The word that is most often on the lips of European women of all countries today is milk. How to get milk for the babies and young children is a gripping problem. Women, with their nurture sense, have become keenly alive to the fact that the urgent need of Europe today is the revitalization of its coming generation. Children all over Europe are suffering from malnutrition and schemes of salvation for them are the schemes that most engage women's attention. Milk, of course, looms large in any scheme of salvation for children."

This was one of the significant statements made by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt on her return June 29 from Europe, where she attended a meeting of the International Suffrage alliance.

The Congress.

Referring to the congress of the International Woman Suffrage alliance which was held in Geneva under her presidency from June 6-12, Mrs. Catt said that thirty-five countries in all were represented and sixteen of them had government representatives. The only countries of Europe not represented were Soviet Russia and Belgium. All the new republics that have broken away from Russia along the western front were represented. Four countries that were former suffrage associations until now sent delegates to represent these national suffrage bodies. These countries are Uruguay, the Argentine, Chile and Greece. As there are only fifty-two or three countries in the world, the representation of thirty-five of them at the congress was phenomenal and indicative of the high value given to women's possible political contribution to the world over."

Work Among Negro Illiterates.

The total enrollment of negroes in Atlanta, who entered the illiteracy classes up to date are 914.

Of the number taught 771 made progress, while 300 were taught to read and to write well. Specimens of their work were submitted to Commissioner of Education Brittain and the state illiteracy commission.

There have been twenty-nine teachers who have taught in the various classes. Eight of these were volunteers and twenty-one were paid. The board of education paid nine of the teachers, the Neighborhood Union (a colored institution) paid one and Mr. John A. McRae, one dollar a month.

The classes have been held in schools and churches and it is largely due to the faithful work of Mrs. D. S. Sherrill, superintendent of the illiteracy classes, that they have proved so successful and that there are at present two permanent night classes among the negroes of Atlanta.

In these illiteracy classes the students range from 78 years of age to 18.

In the report of the work to the state commission special mention is made of the splendid cooperation in the work of leading white citizens.

FIRST MAN CONVICTED UNDER 'BLUE SKY' LAW

Sentence of Malone in Dublin to Have Deterring Effect.

Secretary of State S. G. McLendon was greatly gratified yesterday to learn, in the conviction of J. H. Malone by the city court of Dublin, that a serious effort was at last being made by the courts to enforce the "blue sky" law. Thus is the first conviction to be obtained for violation of the "blue sky" law. Mr. McLendon says, although the act was passed as long ago as 1913.

The case against Malone, who was arrested in Atlanta last spring for selling stock of the Virginia Oil and Gas company without disclosure, was a serious one, as indicated by the fact that the court inflicted upon him the full penalty of the law, $1,000 fine or imprisonment for twelve months in the county chain gang, and also that four additional accusations were pending against him. An appeal was taken by Malone's attorney, J. E. Pottle, of Dublin.

Mr. McLendon says that he has had considerable difficulty in securing the co-operation of the prosecuting attorneys in the enforcement of the law. He can only bring the attention of violations of the law which come within his knowl-

THIRD DIVISION VETERANS TO HOLD BIG REUNION HERE

In celebration of the two weeks from July 15 to August 1, during which time the Third division met in Atlanta, the Atlanta branch of the Third division society will hold a banquet and smoker at the Atlanta Hotel on July 22. All former members of the Third (regular) division who intend to participate in the festivities are asked to register at the hotel by July 21. The entertainment committee consists of C. E. Cordes and A. V. McGregor. This committee of two is devoting their attention on inducing every former Third division man to attend.

Generally, however, they have no more information which they have given the The case of City Solicitor Hightower, of the Dublin court, however, was an exception. He is vigorous and uncompromising in his stand in Laurens county and is being given every assistance by Secretary McLendon, who sent Charlie Cook, one of his agents, to Dublin to testify against Malone.

Chow will be blown promptly at 8 o'clock, and the committee announces that mess kits will be "de-lop," that no lines will be formed; the M. Spring Street Work Is Again Enjoined; Hearing July 24

For the second time since the work of repaving Spring street was started, the city and county were temporarily enjoined from proceeding Saturday when Judge George T. Stanley issued a injunction.

The injunction was filed by Mrs. Lucy T. Stanley, through her attorney, Roy S. Drennon. The case was set for hearing on July 24.

The petition asks that the city and county be restrained from cutting away the sidewalk in front of the petitioner's property on Spring street, and that the sidewalk be set out to move four and one-half feet of sidewalk from in front of the petitioner's property without any damage or condemnation proceedings and without compensation for same.

For great interest to boy scouts of the troop whose scoutmasters are unable to spend a vacation with them in the woods, as any scout in the city can easily attend. And there are very few scouts who do not yearn for the woods and for camp life, for that is their hobby and the dreams of a dreamer.

Camp Friendship will be under the personal supervision of Associate Scout Executive Roland L. Shine, and he is to have as his chief assistant the Scoutmaster of Troop 15. There will also be a number of older scouts acting in the capacity of leaders in the groups, as well as a sufficient proper direction and close supervision.

The camp is located on a point jutting out into Lake McCrary, and is shaded by pine trees. The very attractive swimming beach is conveniently near, and the scouts in attendance at the camp are sure to have a hearty full of swimming.

Every precaution will be taken to insure absolute safety while the scouts are in the water. The guard will be on the water in the boats, and will carefully ob-

The Hat War —and Paris Began It!

"Paris Is the Only Style Centre," Declare the French Milliners; so the American Designers Are Preparing to Show Paris That the "Made in America" Hat Is the Best.

AN untimely sneeze, a slap on the wrist, even a stolen kiss have plunged nations into war. A revolver shot precipitated the great World War and now a woman's hat, a simple little affair of straw and feathers, is the innocent cause of another.

Manifesting a spirit of fraternity and brotherly love and prompted by the kindest and most peaceful feelings imaginable, three thousand American designers and creators of millinery recently subscribed to a $5000 fund with which to buy a new hat for Mme. Deschanel, wife of the distinguished President of the French Republic. And now the war is on.

It was a very good hat, as the photographs, published at the time, readily suggested. It was of a distinctive American design and consisted of silk, paradise fins and lace. Each of the nine paradise fins cost a trifle more than $500. The silk lining was in 48 sections—one for each State in the Union—and the hat after being tried on by numerous subscribers to the fund, photographed from every angle and pronounced a dream, was placed in a silken lined box tied with tri-colored ribbons and prepared for shipment to Paris, there to be worn by Mme. Deschanel.

Diplomatic usages required, first of all, that the President of France be notified of the proposed gift and given time to prepare a gracefully worded appreciation of the great honor about to be conferred upon him and the French nation. But instead of the expected "appreciation" a cablegram came from Paris to the effect that the hat need not be forwarded. It could not be accepted.

And now the Association of Paris Milliners has explained why in what practically amounts to an ultimatum. They have assumed responsibility for President Deschanel's refusal of the "Made in America" hat. American milliners, they assert, instead of attempting to design hats for Parisian leaders of fashion to wear, should be content to copy the latest Parisian styles because Paris is the only style centre on earth. Moreover, they believe that all the new styles in hats should be labeled "Designed in Paris."

And that is how the war began. American milliners, through President Henry S. Bernhard of the Retail Millinery Association of America, have decided to reply to the Paris ultimatum by designing millinery creations which the Paris hat makers never even dreamed of. And they are going to exhibit them in Paris, too.

The Paris milliners, on the other hand, are preparing to flood the American market with designs calculated to drive American millinery out of the hat market.

Meanwhile, the $5000 hat designed for Mme. Deschanel remains in America. Four copies of it were sold recently in Boston at $175 apiece.

FOR BABY'S BEST BIB AND "TUCKER"

By Adelaide Byrd

ACCESSORY to a baby's charm and future good grooming are these. One might even go so far as to say essential to a baby's life are these. For, pray, what is a wee shaver without a bib and a cap and a pair of booties? And who is he if this same bib and cap and booties are not the very acme of daintiness?

Assuredly, this set is the acme of daintiness as far as design goes, and careful stitchery upon dainty material ought to result in a finished product of really exquisite charm. However, all is not charm about this trio; there is an equal amount of practicality here, too. Which is more or less self-evident, when you really consider the thoroughly economical cut of that cap, for example, or again, the altogether simple plan of the booties.

When you compare the tantalizing roundness of the old-fashioned type of infant cap with the wonderfully convenient flatness of this modernized version of it—particularly when it comes time for laundering—then you must surely agree that the world has progressed in some respects.

This pattern is very little more than a woman-sized cuff with a flaring extension; but a few buttons down each side and just a wee bit of gathers at the back turn it into the very snugger of little caps. In pique or linen it would be quite as practical in a material way as it is in the matter of cut.

Yes, the decoration is rather tedious, but then there is not enough of it to make it irksome; just enough to make the cap a thing of individual loveliness. As already suggested, you will do well to make French knots of those little buds, likewise the flower centers, unless you have the patience to make such very tiny eyelets. And as for the rest of the design, how you ought to develop it, you can quite readily decide for yourself.

Just a word, too, about the mechanism of this cap, so to speak. When you cut your buttonholes don't forget to put buttons for them along the opposite edge. Diminutive pearl buttons would be fetching, or self-carved buttons, if you prefer. However, the former are going to come out better "in the wash."

Now, there is little or nothing about the bib that you can't immediately see for yourself, since it follows more or less conventional bib lines. So let us on to the booties.

Still, there isn't much about that, either, that isn't more or less self-explanatory. Here you have a pattern for the whole sole of the miniature bit of footwear, and then you have next the cuff of it. A double thickness of pique or linen is suggested for the making of the sole. And that accomplished, you will be engrossing yourself with the decoration of the cuff. The final step is the altogether easy one of catching the edges of the cuff along to the edge of the sole and finally turning in the seam at the back.

And here's hoping that baby will approve his new set!

Embroider Natural Patterns

AS it ever occurred to you to embroider or bead the "natural" patterns in printed or brocaded materials? It can be done most effectively.

For instance, take a bag of brocade. The pattern of the brocade may be outlined with metal beads and the result will more than repay you for your little effort.

Or suppose you are going to make a smock or blouse of printed voile. You could add a very desirable touch by outlining the print with embroidery floss or embroidery ribbon.

A frock of dainty swiss can be completely transformed into a frock of rare distinction if for the trimming you merely bead the pattern of the swiss with colored beads.

The foulards with the large dots can be worked up into stunning overblouses if you will, with steel beads, bead the dots. You may bead the dots so that they will form a pattern or you may simply bead, say, every other one or one in four, thus securing an all-over design.

The "natural patterns" of various stitche's really offer great opportunity either in working out small designs for front, neck and sleeves or for tracing out an all-over pattern of some sort.

In this tracing out of "natural patterns" remember that for your working materials you have not only embroidery floss and ribbon worsted and beads, but also raffia and regular twine, either in natural color or dyed.

Where to Put Your Magazines

YOU can provide a most attractive place for your magazines if you will avail the use of a market basket.

Obtain one which is not very much longer than it is wide, but one which is quite deep. If you can handle a paint brush with artistic results, paint a spray of pink roses with green leaves upon each side of it. Use oil paints, of course, and do be sure to use a very dark green for the leaves and a deep pink for the roses. Then about the top wind dark green raffia in and out in whatever fashion you wish. You might have one strand running one way and another in the opposite direction, but have them cross on top. In similar fashion wind the handle with the raffia.

If you wish you could add a crotchetting, which would repeat the rose pattern of the design upon the outside of the basket.

Such a basket as this looks particularly attractive somewhere in the vicinity of the fireplace.

Raffia Embroidery's the Very Newest

NEVER than beads, newer than leather, newer than worsted, newer than any sort of embroidery—newer than all these is the novel raffia embroidery which is to be seen on hats, dresses, bags and even belts of advance styles.

The patterns, as a rule, are quite simple, but most effective. They are worked out in single lines.

A fabric hat of last year, for instance, of satin or taffeta, may be stylishly transformed if you use a bit of raffia embroidery in one or two or even more contrasting colors. Upon navy or brown either lacquer red or natural raffia goes very well indeed. A very stunning hat of navy satin is dependent upon the peacock green and peacock blue raffia embroidery for its effect.

Upon dresses of all varieties which are not subjected to tub cleansing raffia is used. Satin and serge especially lend themselves to this sort of embroidery.

Bags embroidered to match hats are fashionably reasonable. With foulard bags the foulard pattern may be worked in raffia. Similarly, with ribbed silks a decorative effect may be obtained by using raffia to outline the ribs at intervals.

Raffia may be plaited to make a string belt. Sometimes several strands of it are rolled together and bound at intervals with worsted or with bits of raffia. Give such string belts either raffia or worsted tassels.

Of course, raffia may be used simply to embroider a belt. Imitation leather belts for sweaters may be color-

The New Bedtime Doll

NOT every doll can experience being a bedtime companion and companion it is your looking and beautiful as before. Yet bedtime companions are most valuable to the little girls who have doll families.

Instead of letting Mary Jane take Rosabelle, with all her French beauty and all her clothes with her, why not supply her with a new member to her family, a doll especially built for bedtime?

Such a doll is a very fascinating little person. She is never the worse for bedtime wear, and she has an attractive head, one of those baby doll heads with the red lips, pink cheeks and black hair painted on its head. Fasten it on to a "rag body." The rag body is the unique part of Sandymary. She has a very short waist and a long, slender neck which turns out so if there were a voluminous petticoat underneath. She wears an all-enveloping gingham apron, either pink and white or blue and white. Her sleeves are fastened into two small pockets. There are no arms. The skirt really is a pillow, and is, therefore, stuffed out into its corners by means of a small bag.

The waist, too, is stuffed with feathers.

You might give her a little tri-cornered cap to match her apron.

Now, Sandymary stand the test of being a night companion, but also she will be a more comfortable companion for Mary Jane than one of her hard dolls.

WERE ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE CZAR'S FAMILY MURDERED?

Strange Story of a Girl Admirer of Nicholas II Told for the First Time---By Princess Catherine Radziwill

(CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK)

In concluding the chain of circumstances surrounding the reported death of the czar and the other members of the royal family, which I have set down as it has come to my attention from various sources without attempting to color them but merely letting them speak for themselves, I of all the Russias comes to me from the reports which have been in circulation since the disappearance of Czar Nicholas II, and his family.

This story of the undying devotion of a peasant girl to the last czar have promised to publish what was to me one of the most startling of a private source but one which I have every reason to believe and which surely would be above any attempt at pure falsification or cheap faking. The story freely takes it for granted that the czar and czarina, together with their daughters, were slain, as we have been told through more or less authenticated reports. That the only son of the last of the Romanoffs was not murdered, however, is the basis of the contention here set down and that a true heir to the throne exists is the definite conclusion reached.

I am making no apology for this story, but merely transcribing it as it came to me, with all its apparent impossibilities and easily discovered discrepancies with other reports, some of which I have also published in this series. Above all, I do not wish to be in the position of drawing any conclusions for the reader. I want him to think for himself, as I have been trying to do through all this mass of confusing and mysterious report. Here, then, is the story of a young woman and Nicholas II.

The drama began six months before the great war broke out. The czar had invited himself to dinner with the officers of his hussar regiment, a time he was very fond of doing, because it was the one occasion when he could forget for a few hours his multitudinous cares of a sovereign of 180,000,000 people. When a young man, before he ascended the throne, he served as an officer in this regiment, and he kept a warm place in his heart for the members of it, and he liked nothing better than to spend a merry evening with its officers, some of whom were old comrades.

The songs of Tzigan girls, pretty and graceful, blended with the soldiers' choruses and added to the pleasure of the evening, and sometimes it was the early morning before the assembly broke up and the emperor returned to the routine in which his court days were spent.

On the occasion about which I am writing, Nicholas seemed in a particularly pleasant frame of mind and in no hurry to bring the entertainment to a close. When the first rays of dawn appeared through the drawn blinds of the windows he expressed the wish to visit the barracks and stables of the regiment before going home. It was about the time that the men arose for the duties of the day, and the emperor found them busy attending to their horses and putting the courtyard of the barracks in order.

As he stepped out of the mess into that yard his attention was attracted by the slender figure of a girl crossing it in haste toward the quarters of the noncommissioned officers of the regiment.

She was a pretty, dark-eyed graceful creature, and something in her appearance appealed to the imagination of Nicholas, because he called her to him and asked who she was and what had brought her to the barracks. He learned that she was the daughter of the oldest regimental sergeant; that she lived with him and her mother in the barracks, and that she had gone out to fetch the daily portion of milk their household required. She begged the sovereign's pardon for having dared to show herself without permission before him, adding that she had no idea that his majesty was in the barracks.

Nicholas smiled and replied that, far from being angry, he was glad to have seen such a pretty girl, and he promised to send her a present as a compensation for the fright which his sudden appearance had caused her.

This was the beginning of a flirtation, if one can call it by such a name, between the powerful and the mighty czar of all the Russias and a simple peasant girl. It passed unnoticed at first, even in court circles, and only a small number of people became aware of this "new fancy" of the emperor, as they called it. The girl herself was a sweet type of creature, so overawed by what had befallen her that she hardly could understand it. But she grew to love Nicholas with an affection such as he had never inspired in a woman before, and she gave him all the devotion her soul could feel.

For some months life seemed to Nadia (this was the girl's name) to be an enchanting dream, and then came the day when Russia learned she was about to fight the strong military power that had suddenly and unexpectedly thrown the gauntlet into its face.

The hussars of the Imperial guard were among the first to start for the front.

For the emperor these days were most painful and difficult, and it was not to be wondered if he gave more and more of his heart to the simple-minded girl who had attracted his attention on that winter morning in the courtyard of the barracks. His instinct told him that she was the one disinterested affection, except his children's, which he had in the world, and that she was also the solitary being who never asked him for anything and who did not wish him to give her anything. And this conviction made him seek her society oftener than he had done before—he was so weary, so tired sometimes, so desirous of forgetting for a few moments the heavy load of anxieties and cares which lay upon his shoulders. Nadia was always full of sympathy, always ready to listen to all that he had to tell, and even when she did not understand all that he said she could find the words which gave him the rest his whole being craved. This simple Russian girl seemed to be the living personification of Russia's faith, and when he looked upon her beautiful, serene face he thought that after all St. Nicholas, the patron saint of his people, would take pity upon him and upon them and lead the country to safety and victory.

But the war lasted and public discontent increased, and not only the troops but the people began to murmur against the government and the sovereign.

Nadia heard all these mutterings and her heart became very sore and heavy. She tried once or twice to mention these ominous signs to Nicholas, but he had always silenced her, and she felt too shy to say anything that might have been construed by him as a criticism of himself or of the empress, the proud and haughty woman who had brought upon herself the hatred of the whole nation.

One day Nicholas told Nadia that he was going to start for the front. A week or two passed and the revolution took place, a revolution heralded with joy and relief by all those who had the welfare of Russia at heart. Everywhere exclamations of joy were heard, everywhere flags were flying and men carousing with joy at the overthrow of the dynasty of Romanoff. No one gave a thought of pity or of regret for the chief of that mighty race, hurled down from high high estate by the merciless hand of fate and his own folly.

Nadia wept silently in the solitude of her room. Her mother lay ill in bed, her brother was at the front and her father had fallen in one of the first battles of the war. She had no one to turn to, no one with whom she could exchange expressions. She was wondering what was to happen to her, what was to happen to Russia and to the man who had been its head and chief. She heard that he had been taken a prisoner by his former subjects, and that he was about to be exiled.

The emperor started. "I know it," he said, "they want to send me to England, and it is the best thing that could happen to me at present."

"No, no, not to England!" exclaimed the girl. "They will never send you to England; they mean to kill you, and in order to do that you must be far, far away in Siberia, where no one will be able to learn what has befallen you."

The emperor started. "What do you know, Nadia? What Nicholas, she is a friend, and I know her. Speak out, girl, what you have come to tell."

"They mean to kill you, to kill you soon," murmured Nadia in quick broken accents. "They are only awaiting some men on their way here from Petrograd. It is all settled, you are to die, but if you wish I can save you. The guard, they are friends of mine; they will help. You will receive soldier's clothes and a man who can be depended upon will lead you to a place of safety. Only you must not wait; you must go at once before it is too late."

"And my wife and my children?" asked Nicholas.

"They must stay here; I can do nothing for them; my friends can save only you—they cannot take away seven people."

"And you suppose that I would leave them?" said the emperor slowly. "You are wrong to think so. If I can be saved alone, then I prefer to die or meet any fate that may await me, but it would be cowardice to depart and leave them here."

"Nothing will happen to them; they will be safe. It is you and only you they mean to kill. Madam," she cried out, falling on her knees before the empress, who by that time had recovered her scattered senses and was listening intently to the conversation. "madam, tell him he must go. Tell him it is necessary he should go."

"I cannot do that," coldly replied Alexandra Feodorovna.

"Then you will kill him and his blood will be upon your hands," exclaimed Nadia. Nicholas went up closer to her.

"Nadia, listen," he said, "for what you have done tonight I can never thank you sufficiently. What you ask of me is impossible, but if you can save some one then save my son, save him for my sake and for the sake of Russia."

The girl looked at him with an agonized expression of terror and love in her large, blue eyes.

"I will try," she said. "I will try for your sake, but not for that woman's," pointing toward the empress, and she vanished out of the room as unexpectedly and noiselessly as she had entered it.

Again weary days went round, during which the captivity of the unhappy Romanoffs became closer and closer, and their anxiety as to the fate which awaited them more and more painful and heart-rending.

Then one morning the emperor saw a blue handkerchief waved in the distance from his window by a woman dressed in peasant's clothes, and he knew that he was going to hear again from Nadia.

She came about midnight, while the guards downstairs were drinking and playing cards without troubling about the prisoners confined on the upper floor. She came in the same peasant's clothes in which the emperor had seen her from the distance, and she carried a parcel which contained garments for a small boy the size of Nicholas.

"Dress him quickly," she said. "Every moment is precious. I must get him out before the others come." "My son, my son," cried the empress. "Will you let my son be killed?"

"Will you let my son be killed?" exclaimed Nadia. "I must be mad, woman, to think of yourself at such a time. If your son is to live, and to be one day the czar of all the Russias you have to send him away at present."

Alexandra gave way to one exclamation of dismay and fell upon the floor in a dead faint.

"Quick, quick!" cried Nadia. "Dress him up. Oh, will not one help me?" she added in despair.

"I shall help you," suddenly said a clear and quiet voice, and the Grand Duchess Tatiana appeared on the threshold of the room. "I shall help you."

The child, who by that time was half dead with terror, was quickly dressed by his sister and Nadia, and then the latter raised the weak, slight figure in her arms and lifted it up to his father.

"Kiss him and bless him," she said, "and bless me also."

Nicholas raised his hands to heaven.

The peasant girl had been true to her salt, as they say in the east. Alexis was conveyed in safety back to Siberia and hidden under the care of Admiral Kolchak. That night the czar, his wife and their daughters were murdered. Although the boy was missed, the assassins had no way of knowing what had happened to him and insisted that he had shared the fate of the other members of the family.

This is the story exactly as it came to me from a source which, as I have said, I have never had reason to question. The report added that one of the reasons for the execution of Admiral Kolchak by the soviets was his refusal to tell where he had hidden the heir of the Romanoffs, although this rumor, along with others, will be stoutly contradicted.

Soon after I received this story a clipping from a Swedish paper reached me, giving an account of the trial of the czar's murderers, and one paragraph struck me so forcefully that I am including here a somewhat free translation of the entire item, calling attention to the absence of the names of two children of the czar in the formal indictment against the murderers. Could it be possible that not only the young czarevitch was carried away just before the murder, but also his sister, the Grand Duchess Tatiana? Here is the Swedish item. It is headed:

TRIAL OF THE CZAR'S MURDERERS
Is the Heir to the Throne, Alexis, Alive?

According to information come from Rewal, we have authentic information of the trial in Perm of the revolutionary authorities of the murderers

One of the last pictures of the imperial family in the heavy garb of a Russian winter.

The Grand Duchess Tatiana, one of the daughters of the last czar, whose name was omitted in the indictment of murder charged against revolutionary authorities at the trial in Perm.

"Sufficient to warn you!" she exclaimed, "to tell you to take care. Listen!" she added quickly, "Listen well, because perhaps I may never be able to speak with you again. Whatever happens to you, wherever you may be sent in exile I shall follow you, I shall watch over you and I shall try to save you. And be always on the lookout for me, and if you see this blue handkerchief waved somewhere in the distance then you will know that I am near, trying to get into communication with you. Remember this, and trust me, trust me until the last. Now I must go."

She seized the corner of the military cloak which Nicholas was wearing and pressed it to her lips, then fled quickly, as the figure of a red guard officer was seen approaching from the distance.

A week later the imperial family was advised to its consternation that the new government had decided not to allow it to go abroad, but to send it "for safety" to Tobolsk. Resistance was out of the question, and the unhappy prisoners started on the first stage of that fatal journey.

The first months of their exile passed quietly enough. The Siberian population was rather in sympathy with the exiles, and Nicholas and his children found themselves liked even by those who had been enemies of the imperial regime.

Nadia had followed the exiles without the emperor's knowledge, until he saw her in church one Sunday, looking pale and grave, though more beautiful than ever. They exchanged a few glances and this was all. A meeting between them was impossible, but the girl contrived to see and speak with the czar's aide-de-camp, and through him she conveyed the warning that a powerful party in Petrograd was clamoring for his life, his existence being considered dangerous to the safety of the country.

Nicholas again did not believe her. The day came when a strong detachment of red guards arrived from Moscow, with orders to convey him and his family to Ekaterinburg, in the Ural mountains.

At one of the stops the attention of the emperor was suddenly attracted by a young postilion. Something in his appearance seemed strangely familiar to Nicholas, who went up to him. The boy, for such he appeared, raised his eyes and the emperor recognized Nadia. She put up her fingers on her lips to enjoin silence, then dropped a small piece of paper on the ground. Nicholas did not move, and his features retained their usual impassibility, but he had understood, and in his turn he let his glove fall. Picking it up, he secured the note which the girl had thus contrived to give him.

"It contained only a few words, recommending that he refuse to answer any question that might be put to him and to watch for any signal which eventually might be made to him by means of the blue handkerchief already spoken of. Nicholas carefully tore the message to pieces, which he scattered on the snow as he was being driven away. But after this he carefully kept watch and when finally settled in the sordid house where his last days were spent he used to remain for hours at the window scanning the horizon for the help which he hoped would be extended to him.

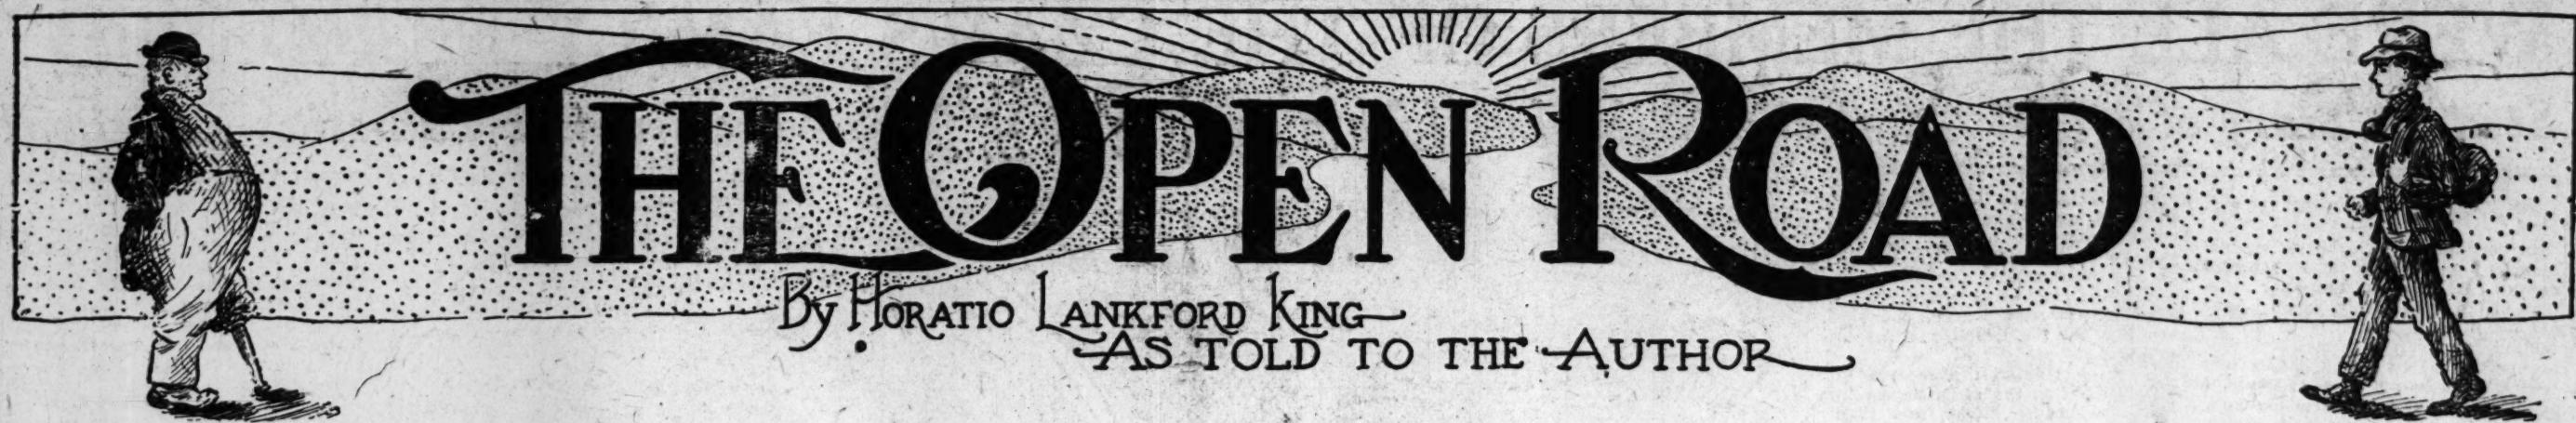

One night after he had returned with the empress in the small room that had been assigned to them, the door was opened and Nadia came in. "Don't speak," she cried. "I have come to warn you."

"Who is that woman?" cried the emperor. "How does she come here? How?"

"Hush, Alice, hush!" exclaimed Nicholas, "she is a friend, and I know her. Speak out, girl, what you have

By MORATIO LANKFORD KING
AS TOLD TO THE AUTHOR

From Houston I drifted to Galveston. At Galveston I boarded a freighter bound for Tampico. But a storm delayed us, and when we finally reached port after much buffeting by the heavy seas encountered I had developed a good case of malaria and was as yellow as a Georgia pumpkin, with very little ginger left in my legs to enable me to navigate at all. The captain of the leaky, timber-rotted old freighter, an old Scotchman and a kindly sympathetic old soul for all his profanity and bluff found me a place to eat and sleep with an Irish family who lived not many blocks from the waterfront and there left me in good charge, promising to take me back to the states after his return from British Guinea, two months later.

I recovered rapidly from the attack of fever; but for the time being had lost a good deal of my youthful vigor, and the climate was abominable. Besides, I was homesick—not for my relatives and the old familiar surroundings of my boyhood, but merely homesick for things and people of my own nationality. Outside of the family circle of my Irish friends, with whom I roomed and boarded, there were few persons who spoke my language, and I was indeed a stranger in a strange land.

I was strong enough to get about, about the same time my last dollar had gone out to defray the expenses of my lean fare and poor lodgings with the Irish family—I slept in a small adobe building in the back yard, known as a patio, next to the horse and chickens—my Irish friend got me a job in an American establishment, exporters of tobacco, for which he was drayman. I was accepted on his recommendation and put to work in the packing department, a large, poorly ventilated room reeking with the humid odor of ripening tobacco and over-crowded with thirty or more native girls and women, who worked twelve hours out of each twenty-four, rolling cheap Mexican cigarettes and wrapping them in layers of cured corn shucks. It was my duty to pack the filled corn cones in neat boxes of fifty packages each and seal the same with a required revenue stamp. The pay was poor; and at the end of the week I found, after reimbursing my Irish benefactor for the privilege of eating at his table, between the baby and the next youngest child, and sleeping next to the horse and chickens in the back yard, that I had remaining less than one peso, its equivalent in American money being about fifty cents!

So homesick and miserable was I in fact that in a moment of youthful despondency I mailed my uncle a postcard, informing him of my whereabouts. This I afterwards regretted for fear my casual inquiry might be construed by him as an exhibition of that type of despondency and softness of character to which he had so often made such scathing comment. However, that postcard was to be my last and only offense; and with the final passing of my homesickness I never thought of my relatives again, except with the old bitter resentment which the last words I had had with my uncle aroused in my rebellious nature. I resolved to cut myself loose from former things; and as the days went by I sank deeper into the life I was to follow for a number of years. This resolution grew into absolute forgetfulness of the past. I forgot even the memory of my father and mother. I was nothing more than a derelict. And what more fallow soil could evil have selected in which to sow her seed of destruction!

CHAPTER TWO.

As the weeks went by I sought and found the opportunity to gamble. And by gambling I managed to swell my spending money of less than one peso to a much larger sum varying amount of cash. Mexico is and always has been a country of lax laws in the restriction of gambling. And during the public fiestas especially gambling was and is today the chief absorbing recreation of the populace. It is then, during the fiestas, that the real spirit of the people manifests itself. At the time I was in Mexico every form of gambling was carried on quite openly and with the sanction of the government—from roulette to simple cock-fighting. But I devoted all of my free time to playing cards, the science of it appealing to me as much as the innate greed of gain. Besides, I was a master at cards; and as a rule I discovered that the Mexican was not

His more puerile mind ran to the simpler forms of the games of chance, such as keno and wheels of fortune, with the odds about two hundred to one against him. But that is the Mexican every time. He makes about the same kind of gambler as he makes a government—a slip-shod loosely constructed hoity-toity individual is the average Mexican, with no brain and no system. All that he understands is what he sees, and he leaves the rest to a child-like faith in good omens and religious incantations. I have known them to offer up a prayer before placing their money on one of the nine numbers of Mexican roulette—and one certainly needs the help of a deity to win at Mexican roulette. Also keno. Keno I naturally looked upon with superior scorn. I wanted a man's game—and I got it.

And in order to look as much like a man as possible, considering my immaturity of years, I pains-takingly cultivated a budding mustache which even in its incipiency lent a few borrowed years to my general appearance. I already possessed a pair of square shoulders—something you rarely see in Mexico—which were acquired in a military school during the life of my parents, and a goodly supply of firm muscles. So it was not long until I was counted as one of the night-habits of one of the better and more select gambling dens situated in the rear of a first-class cantina, saloon, at the edge of the warehouse district near the wharves. This place was frequented by that ever passing polyglot of characters of the open seas—not the mere jack and cottontressed sailor, but the seaman high-er up; men who had money in their mill-dewed wallets along with a three month's thirst and a burning desire to quench it. And when they played, they put their wallets out on the tables in front of them and settled down for the night. Such were my hospitable victims, and such I learned to fleece with a defter hand and a quicker mind. The thought of the temptation to cheat, never once entered my mind as a permanent descent from honesty until I was thrown in company with those old sea dogs with their blatant tongues, their fierce visages and their quite simple and guileless natures ashore. The run of them was easy; and I did them without a single qualm of conscience. All sorts and descriptions of gold coins fell into my hands—French, Italian, English, South American—and I fat-tened.

My stay in Tampico might have continued indefinitely, though I had a natural dislike of the place and climate, had it not been for the sudden turning up of one of those fateful incidents—and it is the incident always which governs and dictates the fate of the true adventurer of the Open Road—which was the cause of my rather precipitous departure to new scenes.

While an employee in the cigar factory mentioned, I became enamored of one of the native girl workers—a black-eyed, vivacious young creature possessing an attractive, voluptuous figure and the nature and disposition of a second Carmen. She could not have been more than sixteen, but fully developed and of dangerous charm. My infatuation was returned, and only as a Latin woman returns love—with a fiery, impetuous abandon. I was a gringo, an American; but though this made no difference to Solidad, it made a good deal of difference with the men in the factory. My attentions to Solidad and her open acceptance of me as her lover aroused the enmity of every man in the place. She had no brothers, else the affair might have ended sooner than it did. But she had admirers many; and one night one of these dark-skinned devils followed us to a secret trysting-place in a secluded part of the neighborhood where she lived, and tried to stick a knife between my shoulders. I caught the blade on my shoulder bone, and having gripped my treacherous assailant at the first turn in the defensive I crushed him to the ground.

The pain and blood had aroused a demon in me; and I don't know how long I pummeled him, but when I finally got up from my victim he remained stretched out motionless on the ground. The first sane thought that came to me was that I had killed him, though I had not. The girl though so, too, for we both ran, leaving the Mexican lying there in the black shadows of the tropical night under an isolated cluster of palm trees. And that same night I left for parts unknown to the friends of the Mexican I thought I had killed and the police. And I did not stop moving until I reached the American border and had crossed the Rio Grande at Laredo, Texas.

But Mexico had left its indelible impress upon me. I was now a regular drinker. I drank at all times and anything, even aguadiente. But as I have said before, in a previous preamble of this narrative, drink had but little effect on me outwardly, neither inwardly, as I can recall my numerous and heavy libations. For one thing, I rarely staggered and I more rarely locked the physical part of the confirmed drunkard. And if heavy drinking—and it was heavy with me from the start—had injured me in any way, then my youth has since outgrown the scars. Even today there are no physical symptoms of those past debauches, which with my return to Texas were beginning to assume bigger proportions and recurring at much shorter intervals. In fact, I was now drinking all the time. But, as I have said, I have no special recollection of any unpleasant after-effects of a 'tare,' with the possible exception of a slightly addled memory now and then and an excessive restlessness of spirit which followed fast upon the heels of each new debauch. And new scenes have a way of diverting the channels of one's own troubled thoughts.

Even today I find myself secretly averse to the idea of returning to certain scenes of ancient history in my life. And though I may wander through a town unrecognized for the man I used to be, I experience the harrowing sensation that every one I pass can read something of my past in my face. I almost expect perfect strangers to stop and exclaim, 'There he goes!' And it was just such a trembling anticipatory dread that I first looked into the unsullied eyes of the only woman I ever loved, or ever will love—but that part of my story is far ahead as yet.

When one becomes a regular, full-fledged and initiated sojourner upon the Open Road, one meets up with many queer specimens of humanity—rascals in every thinkable disguise. As a shining example, there was 'Inventor Joe,' who hobbled on a wooden peg of a leg all over the world. He hobbled into my ken in San Antonio—a cheap grocery where I had sought the comforting warmth of a Panhandle farmer. Inventor Joe evidently known his hardships; but like the prairie dog he had become obese from over-eating and despite western droughts, financial panics, wars and rumors of wars and the stings of turpitude of the world in general.

For facial blemishes, Inventor Joe boasted a wide-nostriled snub nose and a cadaverous mouth that sagged extraordinarily at the corners. He was bald on the top of his bullet-shaped head, and the back of his thick neck had the appearance of a flattened and blistered ham. And having had his oratorical fling at the bartender, he turned his entire attention on me.

"I'm Inventor Joe," he said, introducing himself, and extending a hairy hand with no notion as to how I was to paw. "And what's your handle, bo?"

"Wallace," I returned, not sure that I heard of some of the details of my ex-

"Just began this morning." Anyway, Inventor Joe regarded me with a sober and fatherly air, his lower lip sucked in and beer foam in his dirty beard; but he did not pursue the topic further. Perhaps he was stunned.

When we had finished our beers, and Inventor Joe had ravaged a third or fourth time among the desolate remains at the free lunch counter, we boasted the storm together.

The pavements were running with sleetly water, and there were few people abroad. We turned up a narrow, crooked street—most of the streets were narrow and crooked in that town—lined with dark and unlighted whale.

uses, Inventor Joe stamping along at my side with a pudgy hand resting on my arm. Little was said until we had cleared the business district and were nearing the freight yards.

It was pretty dark by now, and there were no street lamps in sight. Just the doleful drip-drip of the soggy rain, the whine of the wind in the telephone wires above our heads and inky darkness. For a while I had the suspicion that this Mr. Inventor Joe had doubts about my being without money and was planning to rob me; that possibly he had a confederate lying in wait somewhere. But had I not already defeated several husky brakies in my short career as an all-around utility man with my fists without taking on a little boastful vanity and self-assurance regarding my own physical prowess as a hefty match even for two like the peg-leg adventurer at my side. I felt sure about this Inventor Joe; and I kept an eye peeled for the possible confederate. But our suspicions did not materialize. We finally came in sight of the drenched and sloppy freight yards—and another husky, with a lantern swinging in the wind over the lintel of the door. Laughter and the scuttling of many feet came to us through the rain.

Inventor Joe, before entering, first flattened his face to a dingy pane of the one window and made a cautious reconnoiter. "Not even a gull in plain clothes," he whispered.

"How can you tell—what's the difference?" I asked.

"They could wear bark like a tree, but I'd know the skin o' them," he willingly enlightened me. "They don't have to flash a badge on me—not me!" Up in Columbus, Ohio—

"There's a state pen up there," I interrupted with a sudden suspicion of him.

Inventor Joe grinned.

"Sure, I used to mop the windows of the warden's office—a kindness I showed him for four years," he grinned again. "Yegging it was." Shouldering through the door, he nodded for me to follow.

Inventor Joe invested another ten cents for a couple of beers, and the clatter of dancing feet stopped for a few moments while all eyes were fixed upon us curiously. We ignored the notoriety, however, finished our beers, feasting again on pretzels and rank slabs of yellow cheese. Then we stepped out into the rain again, we invaded the railroad yards. But as we had passed out, someone shouted:

"I bet them two traveling gents ain't riding the cushioned train."

We climbed into an empty box car, which Inventor Joe seemed to know about and which he assured me was going to be coupled to a "manifest" freight that night bound for El Paso and California—and I might as well go along and keep him company. For good argument, he added:

"El Paso is wide open, sonny. An' if you really savvy how to 'nip' the cardboards, you'll find your pickin's there."

That settled the matter for me. So we crawled under a loose pile of dry excelsior and did not dare to smoke, or even talk above a whisper. In about half an hour we got a heavy load and knew that we were being coupled on to the through freight. This was all I could do so far, but something else opened that jarred all sense of comfort out of us. It was as if we had had a bucket of ice water dashed over us, for the effect was about as chilling. I felt the blood percolating through my veins with a polar, refrigerating turgidity; my larynx felt as if it had swelled to twice its normal size and I choked. One of the 'shacks' had come along, slammed the sliding door of our car shut and locked it from the outside, throwing a hasp into its socket. We were practically entombed alive, and both of us realized it only too well.

The FROCK FAN by Berta Ruck

Being the Story of the Girl With the Passion for Dress

"A PENNY for your thoughts, Miss Kirkpatrick?"

"Oh! I wasn't thinking of anything, especially."

"Come, come! Must have been thinking of something. I wouldn't mind betting that it was about whatever lucky young fellow is due to take you out this evening, eh?"

But Dolly Kirkpatrick shook her head as she looked her desk in the manager's office.

At Welch's, the newest big frock shop in London, it was a minute after closing time. Hence, quite in order that the manager should exchange a few words apart from business with his private clerk.

She was 19 and anachronistically unsophisticated. The manner in which her "boss" eyed her as he spoke conveyed to her the fatherly interest of the kind old thing. Very similar was the first verdict of Little Red Riding Hood upon her wolf. Indeed, as judges of character, Miss Hood and Miss Kirkpatrick were about on a par.

Smiling absently as over some dream of her own, Dolly told him that she wasn't going out that evening with any one.

"Not?" The manager, across the glistening ornate office, still eyed the slim girl. You'd got just the look on your face a moment ago."

Now, the young woman isn't born who will not "rise" to a comment on her facial expression. Even when that comment is made by one as bald, as middle aged, and as rotund as the manager of Welch's. Dolly rose.

"Is there a 'special look' when one is expecting to be taken out to dinner?"

"Why, certainly!" retorted her employer. (He occasionally borrowed an Americanism from his chief, the owner of Welch's.)

"Certainly there's a 'special look.' That is, if the date is with a 'special man.' Miss Kirkpatrick, you are discovered."

"I'm not," ventured Dolly, mutinous under the teasing. "I wasn't thinking about anything of that kind. I was only just thinking about—a frock."

"A frock, eh?" The man laughed, too. The girl thought he would drop the subject. Men were bored if you talked frocks. Especially men to whom "frocks" meant the day's routine and the year's commission. Frock talk was for the wealthy customer, not for the obscure employee.

Here, however, was the manager pursuing the topic quite sympathetically! A fisherman might have recognized his glance as that of the man who thinks he has hit at last upon the right bait for a peculiarly shy trout. But in quite an easy, casual tone he asked: "What sort of a frock? Any particular one you've noticed in the showrooms here?"

"Yes," Dolly sighed. She clinched her hands against her well worn skirt, and into her eyes crept back the look which had caught her employer's attention. The look of the woman dreaming of her heart's desire!

Frocks! Blush colored tulle, light as dawn vapor, spangled with silvery showers; voluptuous velvet of midnight blue, fleeced by cloudiest gray chinchilla, brocaded by one brilliant star; suave satin and frail georgette, tucked and kissing into life a creation of mingled jade and ivy; yes, a green gleaming wave with a crest of foam to drip from the shoulders of the nymph who should dive into this perfect frock.

Ah, if Dolly could have these and all the frocks she wanted! They were all she did want.

Some are obsessed by the craving for alcohol; some for drugs. With some the passion for clothes is as ardent, whether or not it be gratified. With Dolly it remained ungratified.

Now, many girls can look well in cheap clothes. Dolly could not. Her lissome form cried aloud for the costly plainness of the French line. Other girls have personality that outshines any garment they could put on. Not so Dolly. Her small, fair, indeterminate face could light up only under the touch of passion—and frocks were the only passion she knew. She just knew that she could be transformed by the right clothes, even as an uninteresting landscape is transformed into paradise by the fall of snow. And the craving had grown even since her work had lain in a positive fairytale of frocks. Hanging in serried rainbow ranks behind the great glass panels, or set out on the stands, or displayed by the mannequins as they stepped delicately across the showrooms, she beheld daily just the clothes for which she longed. So near; so far!

Back in her dream, forgetting that she had as listener a middle aged business man with purposeful attention in his eyes, the girl babbled on as a girl babbles of her latest love.

"An angel of a little dark blue serge coat frock that came over from Paris this morning. (I went up at lunch time to look at the new consignment.) This one was so simple. But, O! the cut of it! And it's got an adorable little black belt and black buttons down the outer edge of the sleeves and touches of black beading just where you'd never expect them, but where you know they have to be, once you've seen them! It's a frock you could wear all day and every day without getting tired of it, because you'd know it always looked exactly right. And I'd been saving up for a new office frock."

"Well?" put in the manager, with that silky benevolence. "I know the little model you mean. I thought it looked like you when I saw it. I told Madame Laure. If you're wanting a new dress, why not buy that one?"

"Why not?" echoed the girl clerk, and

Over the big cleared table the manager gave her another very swift look.

No. She was not hinting. Such a possibility would not have occurred to her. She was well bred; innocent, too, to silliness. Father a clever and unsuccessful doctor, tucked away in the country somewhere; people poor as church mice, proud as Lucifer; strict as Hades. No. Emphatically she was not a girl to whom one could offer clothes as presents. He wouldn't make that mistake. Try another way.

He said as if with friendly frankness: "All is perfectly simple. Monsieur who spoke to me this morning explained that Miss Kirkpatrick was to have very special terms and could be permitted time, time, time as much as she will, before paying. Actually, he himself will regulate account here, while mademoiselle repays in installments, if it is not? Like that scarcely noticing the expense. So, mademoiselle, I have here one veritable occasion, a such bargain as little robe of the afternoon. Your new coat frock there is très chic. But when you make a visit or go to a matinee you will wish for a change. Something more flou, more pretty. And mademoiselle, who has so much the sense of clothes, and the figure for les toilettes exquises. Regard me this frock—here."

Another ineffably French gesture. "But! All is perfectly simple. Monsieur who spoke to me this morning explained that Miss Kirkpatrick was to have very special terms and could be permitted time, time, time as much as she will, before paying. Actually, he himself will regulate account here, while mademoiselle repays in installments, if it is not? Like that scarcely noticing the expense. So, mademoiselle, I have here one veritable occasion, a such bargain as little robe of the afternoon. Your new coat frock there is très chic. But when you make a visit or go to a matinee you will wish for a change. Something more flou, more pretty. And mademoiselle, who has so much the sense of clothes, and the figure for les toilettes exquises. Regard me this frock—here."

She produced the little robe of the afternoon. It was temptation itself in supplest charmeuse; color a warm gray gleaming to violet; hem, sleeves, and neck fringed by dark monkey fur. Displaying it, the temptress murmured of its show room price, quoted another sum, expatiated, smiled, persisted, dominated the tempted one in a manner that gone but a French saleswoman achieves—a manner that leaves her victim in a state of positive, unreasoning, humble gratitude for defeat.

"O, thank you so very, very much," murmured Dolly Kirkpatrick, overwhelmed. She went out, down in the lift, into the store entrance, passing the big show windows, curtained now, and only showing as huge squares of amber light.

Blackly silhouette against the nearest square, she passed two masculine figures, one taller and slimmer than the other, coming into the building. The slim, younger man had a quick turn of the head as the girl went by.

Dolly did not even see him. Often imagine it is for them that women dress. But the true "frock fan" is she who dresses without a thought of men.

Already Dolly almost knew that she would order that frock.

Already (though this she did not know) she was taking the first step along a path that would lead her—where?

II.

She ordered that frock.

Then another.

Later, a third!

"With three dresses a woman can go anywhere. That is, if they are the right ones," decreed Madame Laure, head of the show rooms. She was one of those sallow but faultlessly turned out French women with disillusioned, not unkindly, eyes. "But the English 'adies,' she turned her quick palms upward, 'they choose thirty-three dresses, always he wrong ones. In buying clothes, mademoiselle, there is one thing to consider—she held up an impressive forefinger, 'you have only one back.' Why buy, therefore for the cupboard? A street dress, perfect of its kind; an afternoon frock, also perfect; a perfect toilette for the evening. Behold all that you need."

"Of course," murmured Dolly, covetously, "but you see I can only order the little serge coat frock."

He added as if with friendly frankness: "All is perfectly simple. Monsieur who spoke to me this morning explained that Miss Kirkpatrick was to have very special terms and could be permitted time, time, time as much as she will, before paying. Actually, he himself will regulate account here, while mademoiselle repays in installments, if it is not? Like that scarcely noticing the expense. And mademoiselle, who has so much the sense of clothes, and the figure for les toilettes exquises. Regard me this frock—here."

"And when is the new evening frock to be finished to fit you?" inquired Dolly's fatherly employer at lunch time. His tone was more than kind now, more than interested. A woman wiser than Dolly would have called it "possessive." Dolly, however, smiled ineffably toward the thought of her newest love, the evening gown.

Needless to add that it was plain, dead black. Madame had not even hesitated between it and the white frost frock with the overdress of tiny glittering icicles. The frost frock model was perhaps more uncommon, but she had mademoiselle's flawless skin of a blonde to flatter against the girl's young back the black chiffon looked like a fall of sleet across a fall of snow. No, she would not allow a touch of color; that would be spoiled by the live rose flush of excitement in Miss Kirkpatrick's little face when she put on the gown.

"It's finished!" breathed Dolly rapturously. "I took it back to my rooms yesterday. I'm going to wear it to a dance that some people I know at Richmond are giving on Saturday."

"Wear it before then!" suggested her employer. And now even Dolly noticed a change in his voice. Even Dolly's bland innocence was conscious of the difference in the man's glance, intent now upon the look in her own face. A quick little thrill of discomfort shot suddenly through her as she sat at the desk opposite to him. What did he mean by staring at her? What did he mean by the tone of his "wear it before then"?

He leaned forward, adding, "Wear it tonight, the pretty new frock. Put it on when you get back. Then I'll call for you later, do you see? Take you out for a nice little dinner somewhere."

Dolly's face lit up; alert, discomposed.

The tone of the man, not the words, sent a further thrill of uneasiness through her. She suddenly seemed to see, not her "middle aged, round, kindly boss," who spoke to her as if she were his own daughter, but a stranger.

"Dinner—she began.

"Yes! That's it. Just the two of us."

"O—it's very kind of you," faltered his clerk, "but I—I think I'd—I think, if you don't mind, that I had better not."

"Now, why not?" A note of ingratiating in the voice which did not reassure.

Dolly, rather flutteringly, "Isn't it supposed to be not quite businesslike to go out to dinner with the people one is working with all day?"

"Ah, stuff and nonsense, my child! This isn't going to be 'business,'" laughed the man, getting up from his seat. "This is a pleasure I've been looking forward to for a week now. I mean that pretty frock for you to wear when you came out with me, to be sure."

He took a step toward her, smiling into her aghast little face. And now at last Dolly Red Riding Hood did see the wolf gleam between her puffy lids. "Why do you suppose I got you the frocks?" he asked. "Eh?"

Dolly rose, too, clutching the back of the chair. "You got them for me?" she faltered. "You? But I—I bought the frocks myself. At least, I—I am going to pay for them, of course."

"Of course!" he echoed with a laugh, still good humored. "But when? Sixty odd pounds takes some saving up out of a salary of £1 a week, my dear. Especially when your other savings have gone on shoes and silk stockings and oddments to wear with the new frocks. Clothes are a very expensive hobby these days. Very expensive, as you find. Better leave that bill to me for the present, eh?" He took a step nearer. She stood motionless, seeing in one flash what she had done—seeing dismissal, debt, disgrace as dim looming shapes ahead, not knowing now where to turn.

"Eh?" he said. "However, if you feel you'd like to give me something on account, what about a kiss now?"

A little horrified cry escaped her. He, exasperated at the instinctive recoil and by the horror on her small face, caught her firmly by the arms.

"O, don't pretend to be shocked!"

She struggled in his tightening grip. With a crash the chair fell to the floor. It drowned the sound of tap on the office door.

"Don't—don't—please!" she gasped. But the sagging face with that wolf glitter in the eyes was thrust closer to her own face that she flung desperately backwards on her slim white neck.

"You won't, won't you?" he growled, crushing her arms in his fingers. "We'll see."

Sudden as a pistol shot another voice rang out over the manager's shoulder. "Here, you sir! What's this?"

Upon which Dolly's arms were released so abruptly that she reeled, and, to steady herself, caught with wildly groping fingers at the desk. But it was not merely the desk that, for seconds, gave her such comforting support; it was a man's hand, and it belonged to the dark young fellow, tall and slim, who had just swung into the manager's office.

Followed a few moments that seemed to the girl a whirling aeon. She was conscious, through a haze of shame and suspense, of her employer standing there, purple flushed, hangdog looking, before the stranger; she heard the young, clear voice of that rescuing stranger with an intonation not of London, not of England.

It was Dolly Kirkpatrick, working like a Trojan to pay off a debt. Her contract with the big cinema firm had been a generous one, but she earned every penny of it.

Dolly's screened image, exquisitely arrogant, beckoned orders to a maid; then stepped languidly forward in a dream dress held upon her shoulders by strings of pearls and puffed over her slim hips as if invisible fairy fingers held out her skirts in admiration of their butterfly fragility—and this was all that the public, lounging comfortably on its velvet cushioned seats, knew of the work. It had never a glimpse of the big bleak cinema studio near the Embankment, the place that resounded like a railway station—Clang! Clang! Clang! By your leave, there! Poirot me, ladies, poind me!—packed with the activities of a giant carpenter shop. Hammer! Hammer! Hammer! Bang! Bang! Bang!—and of the back of a theater—Lights! Lights! Now let her go! Now shoot! Stop, stop, stop! Carpenter here! Go back and do that over again. Now, Miss Kirkpatrick! Where the several kinds of Hades is that—ah, you'll have to wait a bit. Lights, Fred!

Day in, day out, from cheerless morn till chillsome eve, this was the scene in which Miss Kirkpatrick, the dress artist for Welch's, spent the next months of her young life. Under the ghastly lights that turned her first green and mauve, then chalk white and petunia pink, she posed in her "set"—the cardboard room that made her background—or changed her dresses in the dressing room that was a sieve of draughts, or stood about waiting for her instructions, watching the work on another picture, moving out of the way of hustling workmen, and always going over a sum in her head. How soon, on her present salary, could she hope to pay back that £60 to Welch's?

The young American had told her that he had explained things all right to Mr. Welch himself, and that she would not be worried, she could take her own time. The time dragged fearfully to Dolly, just the same.

Then he was grave again. Thoughtfully he said, "Sixty pounds" worth of clothes. That's about £250. And Welch's pay you what is it? Three pounds a week. You'll pardon my putting into your affairs, Miss Kirkpatrick, but you seem to need help."

"O, I should think I did!" muttered Dolly.

"Isn't it frightful?" Dolly gasped. "What do you think of it?"

The young man's gravity lifted for a second. He smiled at her. Very simple, very pleasantly.

Then he was grave again. Thoughtfully he said, "Sixty pounds" worth of clothes. That's about £250. And Welch's pay you what is it? Three pounds a week. You'll pardon my putting into your affairs, Miss Kirkpatrick, but you seem to need help."

"O, no!"

"You'll have to take a new position in some place—a position that brings you in a higher salary so you can save up to pay for those dresses."

"Yes, exactly," said the girl clerk despairingly, "but where can I get that? This was the first place I've worked in. I couldn't ask him for a reference."

"Young Mr. Davies' lips tightened somewhat savagely. "It's he who'll need the reference, I guess. I could—I could have Welch fire him right now. But I don't believe I'll do that. He's too good a manager, and I'm a business man first of all. I believe in keeping folks in the job they do best. I know his type. Straight in business, straight with other men; can't help being lively where women are concerned. I'll see he gets again the flash of a boyish smile—another brand of amanuensis. And as for you, Miss Kirkpatrick, I think I can put you on the position you should take."

"Oh," murmured Dolly, his miserable little face brightening into half credulous hope. "Could you? Could you?"

"Surely," he said quietly. "I've a friend who's just starting a new enterprise. It works in just nicely with—"he glanced about the office—"with this new business of Mr. Welch's. They're offering good pay to their people, those that can do the work right; now they believe in keeping folks on the job they do best."

"But is this anything I can do?"

"Sure; it's frocks," an odd note in his voice over the word—almost the savage note of masculine jealousy. "Trying out the loveliest new frocks. Scores of 'em a day. Ah, you'll like that? Very few English women can step into the style of the day after tomorrow without looking scared it'll bite. They thought of a mannequin from Paris, but that wasn't the idea. It was to show the French gowns beautifully worn by an English girl. Your job, Miss Kirkpatrick."

"To be mannequin in some showroom?" asked Dolly Kirkpatrick thoughtfully. "I didn't know they paid enough for what I save."

The young American shook his black head as he turned to

As a suitable expression of their gratefulness to the children of the United States, and especially to the American Junior Red Cross for aid given in time of great distress, the boys of the Bakule school at Prague, Czechoslovakia, recently made and sent to this country a box of toys.

This gift, now on display at national headquarters of the Junior Red Cross, is of special interest to the Juniors of the southern division. The lid of the box in which the toys were sent across the Atlantic bears this inscription:

"To Dear Miss Fanneal Harrison, for Children of America as a proof of the sincere faithfulness of Bakule's group at Prague."

Miss Harrison's home is in Atlanta. She is the daughter of Z. D. Harrison, clerk of the supreme court. After strenuous labors in behalf of the stricken people in Central Europe, covering a long period, she came home last fall for a rest, but early this year she returned to Czechoslovakia, where, last summer, she did much work among the destitute in the name of the Junior Red Cross. It goes without saying that Miss Harrison is greatly beloved by the children of the new republic for whom she has been providing food, clothing and schooling for more than a year.

TOYS REPRESENT KIPLING'S STORY.

This box of toys, dedicated to her and sent to the Junior Red Cross, presents Kipling's story of "The Elephant Child." The giraffe, the ostrich, the hippopotamus, the baboon, the kolakola bird, the bicolored python-rock-snake, and in all its mightiness, the crocodile which stretched the "child's" mere-smear nose into a long trunk. The scenic background portrays the classic banks of the Limpopo river with its jungle of "fever" trees. These toys were sent to the boys and girls of the Junior Red Cross who have been lastly, but beautifully finished.

The "elephant child" group will be placed in a large school, which, as a Junior Red Cross auxiliary, will devote its energies to aiding Dr. Bakule's pupils.

CARING FOR 10,000 CHILDREN.

Miss Harrison, who sailed for Europe last January to act as assistant director of the Junior Red Cross for Czechoslovakia, reported to national headquarters that she has made preparations for summer colonies in which not less than 10,000 children will be given plenty of fresh air and sunshine, wholesome food and nursed back to health and strength. In her report Miss Harrison said: "This summer will be a very busy one. The different societies are planning to send 10,000 children to summer colonies. We have agreed to establish the health game in all the colonies with a careful system of inspection. The American Red Cross has promised to send out a lot of clothing, towels, wash cloths, soap and toothbrushes, so that we can really teach cleanliness. On April 1 we started a three months' course for the leaders."

This young Georgia woman had a most interesting experience in her search for locations for the summer colonies which will be largely under the direction of the American Junior Red Cross. In writing of this she says: "The last of February found me in a tiny room in the mountains.

I left Prague with a Czech girl as interpreter. We are inspecting castles and empty buildings for the vacation schools. Today we visited the grandest castle I ever hope to be in. It belonged to some Austrian nobleman. It contains innumerable rooms, handsomely furnished. Everything was spotlessly clean, although the family had not lived there for years. There was a broad, glassed-in veranda running the whole length of the inside court, where a half hundred children could sleep; a big kitchen, a bathing room and another veranda where the children could eat. The grandest situation on a very high hill, with a automobile. The trains creep, are unheated, never make connections, and the castles are all from one to three hours' drive from the towns. Carriages are extremely difficult to find and the long rides are bitter cold."

Miss Harrison adds in a foot note that the Paris headquarters of the Junior Red Cross authorized the procuring of the automobile, and she says, "I now feel that I can really get the work done."

Miss Harrison conducted a very successful health camp in Czechoslovakia last summer, and it was because of her success in that work that she was induced to return to Europe and take active management of the Junior Red Cross program in that country this year. She has been asked by the authorities to aid in the organization of a Junior Red Cross of Czechoslovakia, which is to be called "Czech Heart," signifying that the children are the heart of a nation.

THE VICTORY AT SEA By Admiral William Sowden Sims

Meanwhile, on the other side of the Atlantic, a great organization had been created under the able direction of Rear Admiral Albert Gleaves. As soon as war was declared the work was begun of converting into transports those German merchant ships which had been interned in American ports. The successful completion of this work was, in itself, a great triumph for the American navy. Of the vessels which the Germans had left in our hands, seventeen at New York, Boston, Norfolk and Philadelphia, seemed to be adapted for transport purposes, but the Germans had not intended that we should make any such use of them.

Condition Indescribably Bad. The condition of these ships, after their German custodians had left, was something indescribable; they reflected great discredit upon German seamanship, for it would have been impossible for any people which really loved ships to permit them to deteriorate as had these vessels and to become such cesspools of filth. For three years the Germans had evidently made no attempt to clean them; the sanitary conditions were so bad that our workmen could not sleep on board, but had to have sleeping quarters near the docks; they spent weeks scrubbing, scraping and disinfecting, in a finally successful effort to make the ships suitable habitations for human beings. Not only had the Germans permitted such liners as the Waterland and the Kronprinzessin Cecilie to go neglected but on their departure, they had attempted in many cases to injure them in all conceivable ways. The cylinders had been broken, engines had been smashed, vital parts of the machinery had been removed and thrown into the sea, ground glass had been placed in the oil cups, gunpowder had been placed in the coal—evidently in the hope of causing explosions when the vessels were at sea—and other damage of a more subtle nature had been done, it evidently being the expectation that the ships would break down when on the ocean and beyond the possibility of repair.

Although our navy yards had no copies of the plans of these vessels or their machinery—the Germans having destroyed them all—and although the missing parts were of peculiar German design, they succeeded in an incredibly short time in making them even better at speedier vessels than they had ever been before. Renaming the Boats. The natural sense of humor did not fail the transport service when it came to christen these ships; the Prinzess Irene became the Pocahontas, the Rhein, the Susquehanna; and there was also an ironic justice in the fact that the Vaterland, which had been built by the Germans partly for the purpose of transporting troops in war, actually fulfilled this mission, though not quite in the way which the Germans had anticipated. We called in all available vessels from the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and the Great Lakes; England stripped her trade route to South America, Australia and the East, and France and Italy also made their contributions. Of all the American troops sent to France from the beginning of the war, the United States provided transports for 46.25 per cent, Great Britain for 51.25, the remainder being provided by France and Italy. Of those sent between March, 1918, and the Armistice, American vessels carried 42.15 per cent, British 55.40 per cent. (These figures are taken from the annual report of the secretary of the navy for 1918, page 207.)

Two American Battle Squadrons in Europe.

Yet there was one element in the safe transportation of troops which was even more fundamental than those which I have named. The basis of all our naval operations were the dreadnaughts and the battle cruisers of the Grand Fleet. It was this aggregation, as I have already indicated, which made possible the operation of all the surface ships that destroyed the effectiveness of the submarines. Had the Grand Fleet suddenly disappeared beneath the waves, all these offensive craft would have been driven from the seas, the Allies' sea lines of communication would have been cut, and the war would have ended in Germany's favor. From the time the transportation of troops began the United States had a squadron of five dreadnaught battleships constantly with the Grand Fleet. The following vessels performed this important duty: the New York, Captain C. F. Hughes, afterward, Captain E. L. Beach; the Wyoming, Captain H. A. Wiley, afterward Captain H. H. Christie; the Florida, Captain Thomas Washington, afterward Captain W. C. Cole; the Oklahoma, Captain M. L. Taylor; the Delaware, Captain A. H. Scates; the Arkansas, Captain W. H. G. Bullard, afterward Captain L. R. de Stiguer; and the Texas, Captain Victor Blue. These vessels gave this second; it comprises the English Channel, a great force an unquestioned preponderance, and made it practically certain that Germany would not attempt another general sea battle. Under Read Admiral Hugh Rodman, the American squadron performed excellent service and made the most favorable impression upon the chiefs of the allied navies. But these were not the only large battleships which the United States sent to European waters.

Despite all the precautions which I have described, there was still one danger which constantly confronted American troop transports. By June and July, 1918, our troops were crossing the Atlantic in enormous numbers, about 300,000 a month, and were accomplishing most decisive results upon the battlefield. A successful attack upon a convoy, involving the sinking of one or more transports, would have had no important effect upon the war, but it would probably have improved German morale and possibly have injured that of the Americans.

There was practically only one way in which such an attack could be made: one or more German battle-cruisers might slip out to sea and assault one of our troop convoys. In order to prepare for such a possibility, the department sent three of our most powerful dreadnaughts to Berehaven, Ireland—the Nevada, Captain A. T. Long, afterward Captain W. C. Rodgers; the Oklahoma, Captain M. L. Bristol, afterward Captain C. B. Vay, and the Utah, Captain F. B. Bassett, the whole division under the command of Rear Admiral Thomas S. Rodgers. Berehaven is located in Bantry Bay, on the extreme southwestern coast. For several months our dreadnaughts lay here, ready to start to sea and give battle, momentarily awaiting the news that a German raider had escaped. But the expected did not happen. The mere fact that this powerful squadron was ready for the emergency is perhaps the reason why the Germans never attempted the adventure.

What the Map Showed.

A reference to the map which accompanies this article will help the reader to understand why our transports were able to carry American troops to France so successfully that not a single going ship was ever struck by a torpedo. This diagram makes it evident that there were two areas of the Atlantic through which American shipping could reach its European destination. The line of division was about the forty-ninth parallel of latitude, the French city of Brest representing the most familiar landmark. From this point southward extending as far as the forty-fifth parallel, which corresponds to the location of the city of Bordeaux, is a great stretch of ocean, about 200 miles wide. It includes the larger part of the Bay of Biscay, which forms that huge indentation with which our school geographies have made us Americans so familiar, and which has always enjoyed a particular fame for its storms, the dangers of its coast, and the sturdy and independent character of the people on its shores. The other distinct area to which the map calls attention extends northerly from the forty-ninth parallel to the fifty-parallel, and includes both the French great expanses of ocean which was relatively free of submarines.

Our earliest troop shipments disembarked at St. Nazaire; later, when the great transatlantic liners, both German and British, were pressed into service, we landed many tens of thousands at Brest; and all the largest French ports from Brest to Bordes-ous took a share. A smaller number we sent to England, from which country they were transported across the channel into France; when the demands became pressing, indeed, hardly a ship of any kind was sent to Europe without its quota of American soldiers; but, on the whole, the business of transportation in 1918 followed simple and well defined lines. We sent mercantile convoys in what I may call the northern "lane" and troop convoys in the southern "lane." We kept both lines of traffic for the most part distinct; and this simple procedure offered to our German enemies a pretty problem.

For I must repeat, the German navy could maintain in the open Atlantic only about eight or ten of her efficient U-boats at one time. The German admiralty thus had to answer this difficult question: Shall we use these submarines to attack merchant convoys or to attack troop convoys? The submarine flotilla which was actively engaged was so small that it was absurd to think of sending half into each lane; the Germans must send most of their submarines against troop ships. Which should it be?

THE FROCK FAN

so-called, who slipped across the borders of their country to join their English kin in the first year of the world war—afterward transferring to the A. E. F. This Dolly had heard about him, and that now he was in business" in London. But she had not even wondered what Mr. Davies' precise "business" might be. Always he had time for a glance, a friendly greeting for her.

"Say, Miss Kirkpatrick, you look tired to me," he remarked one afternoon when Dolly, who had already made six changes of raiment since lunch time, was leaning limply against her "property" dressing table.

She stood up straight and smiled at him. "It's only the effect of these lights. Anybody would look tired with a green blue complexion and mauve lips!"

His glance seemed to recognize a tiny, everyday bravery. He said nothing. But, when, two hours later, Dolly left her place of toll, she found at the street corner a dark blue car drawn up at the curb and a saluting chauffeur.

"Miss Kirkpatrick? Mr. Davies said I was to drive you on to your rooms, miss."

"How sweet of him!" thought the exhausted Dolly, with a sigh of relief, settling herself back in the car. She smoothed the folds of her afternoon frock, assumed as a change from the serge, because the weather was now springlike.

Touching that gray charm stuff gleaming to violet with fringes of black, she murmured, "It's just the color of that man's eyes."

Then she put up her head and told herself firmly, "When it's paid for I know what I shall do."

V.

With the received bill next to her lighted heart, Dolly went through her morning's toll of "registering" the earliest summer models of garden party and river frocks.

Lunch time found her eating sandwiches in the deserted seclusion of her "set"; she meant to catch the director before he went out of the studio. She had something to say to him. At least, she would have liked to say it to some one else first, if she could catch a glimpse of that some one.

Suddenly she saw him pass between the cardboard screens.

"Mr. Davies!" she called, and her voice flattered like a prisoned bird, she couldn't say why.

He turned. His eyes lit at the sight of the slim figure sitting among the property furniture, wrapped in a pre-war kimono of washed out pink. In the diffused light of the huge emptied place she was honeysuckles fair.

"Mr. Davies. Yes, please do sit down for a moment. I've something to tell you. That $60. Isn't it lovely? I paid up the last of it yesterday!"

"Congratulations!"

"Thank you. And my contract here ends this week!"

"You'll be getting another contract offered now, Miss Kirkpatrick, I guess."

"Yes," she said. "But—now please will you not think I'm ungrateful? Please will you know I'd do realize what that contract meant? It saved me. But—I don't want to sign another contract for this sort of work," said Dolly Kirkpatrick, "not—not even if these people are friends of yours, Mr. Davies."

He nodded in a noncommittal way. There was nothing noncommittal in his glance, which was of tenderest and completest aproval. But she didn't see it. She was not meeting his eyes this morning.

Presently he said, "You'd like some other sort of a job, maybe."

"I was thinking," she began, "about going on a farm. Yes, don't laugh at me! Or I could get a post as swimming instructor at a girls' school—

"Why swimming?"

"Because I swim rather well. Besides—oh!" she cried out suddenly, involuntarily, "I want some job that has nothing to do with frocks!"

And now she looked at him, not dreaming that he could understand this thing that had happened to her. She was cured of the obsession. Frocks! What did they convey to her now? An idea that was forever inseparable from images of discomfort. For ever she would associate "frocks" with toll, with noise and harassment, with this studio of noise and harassment, with the lack of fresh air and sunshine, with deep physical fatigue, with backache, with headache, with being boxed up with the same inconsiderate people day after day, and with the deadliest boredom of all, that of standing, standing, standing about, being kept waiting—that one thing on earth that fills a woman's soul with hate.

Gently the young man asked, "Do you expect me to take this as stop press news?"

"News?"

"Why, yes, that you'd gotten so that you didn't care a great deal about frocks any more. Why, in the name of all get out, do you imagine I picked this job for you?" demanded the American. "I meant you should get to hate the darn things. While you were so crazy about them I knew I hadn't an outside chance you'd get to—"

His voice trailed off huskily.

He looked at her, the purpose of months a-glimm in his handsome eyes of violet gray. She flushed vividly, turning away.

Very gently, quite respectfully, but with the utmost firmness, young Mr. Davies placed his arm about her shoulders. In his other hand he took her chin, raising her face so that he could meet his gaze. It held her, telling her in some seconds a volume of those things for which there is no spoken language. He waited, still holding her with those courtly hands, those courting eyes. Then, as at last a soft sound broke from her, joy and mirth in his face, he spoke.

The half dozen words he uttered may look banal enough on the printed page, but the tone of them held all a lover's triumph.

"O, what a great big sigh!" he muttered, and said no more, putting off for the present all further verbal explanations.

What did it matter that his girl didn't yet know that he, Davies himself, was the owner of the vast studio where they sat, not caring whether it were in a railway station or a rose garden. What did it matter that she hadn't told that her lover was also the head of "Welch's," and that his bride might choose from his or any other show room all the trousseau frocks she would?

Mere details!

The main fact was that with her fair head tilted into his shoulder she sighed and sighed in delight under his kisses, and that her small face was now alight with "the look."

Passion, that had been all for frocks, was now transmuted. And hers were the lips that first breathed its new name.

"O!" sighed Dolly Kirkpatrick once more. "My sweetheart!"

Practice Thrift, President Hayes Urges Club Women

In her address to the twelve district conferences of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. J. E. Hayes, Georgia's president, drew attention to the fact that the south claims the first state in the union to organize its women to make a fight on the H. C. L. Dallas, Texas, organized under the auspices of the Consumers' Housewives Chamber of Commerce and started June, 1919.

In September the government reported Dallas had reduced the cost of living 4 per cent. Gradually other cities followed until the state was organized in November, 1919. In 1920, the department of justice took over the work and now every section of Texas has an active campaign on education and economy. Dallas has just put on a "made-over" garment style show.

In Texas, emphasis is put on patching and mending instead of buying new. Merchants or groups who loyally and intelligently supported them in their campaign to bring down prices to prevent war.

In Texas the spirit seems to be individual responsibility and co-operation of massed effort. All the great resolutions not to buy clothing against which a war tax is levied, as the government has been specific in classifying the luxuries, and to keep within the scope of what the government deems necessities in all purchases of clothing.

West Virginia boycotted potatoes until prices were reduced and in one case a movement was started to have teachers and children wear uniforms. Alabama started the "Patchers" and their slogan is, "Patchers and wives are working to help us save money."

Card from State Regent

Daughters of the American Revolution of Georgia: The following letter of resignation from Mrs. Mather M. Eakes, state corresponding secretary, Cordelle, Ga., has been received by the state regent:

"Cordelle, Ga., June 26, 1920.—Mrs. Max E. Land, State Regent, Daughters of the American Revolution, Cordelle, Ga. My Dear Mrs. Land: Information has just come to me which will cause my plans for the coming year to undergo a radical change. Mr. Eakes has just brought the definite intelligence that we will, in the very near future, remove our residence beyond the limits of the state of Georgia.

"It is, therefore, proper that I convey this information to you together with my resignation as state corresponding secretary of the Daughters of the American Revolution to take effect at such time as my successor can be named and installed.

"I send with my regrets that the circumstances necessitate such action on my part and with expression of appreciation of the great honor conferred in my election to this important office.

"Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Hayes' Speech At Dedication Of New Building

Work of Georgia Clubs As Told to Federation

At the dedicatory ceremonies of the Women's building of the Georgia State College of Agriculture, Mrs. J. E. Hayes, president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, representing the interest of the women of the state in the university in its every department, said in part:

"The women of Georgia appreciate the opening of the university and to show their appreciation they asked the privilege of furnishing rooms in this dormitory even before the cornerstone was laid.

"Since April 6 I have visited every section of Georgia, attending the twelve district meetings and fifteen special meetings. I find the most vital problem is education in all of its phases.

"To further education, the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, when each state president had two minutes in which to tell her special work, Mrs. J. E. Hayes, Georgia's president, said:

"Problems in Georgia.

"The first problem to the Georgia Federation this year involved the very existence of the federation. The state convention endorsed suffrage and the anti-suffragists tried to disrupt the organization. The weapons used for the successful solution of this problem were silence and time.

"Since April 6 I have visited every section of Georgia, attending the twelve district meetings and fifteen special meetings. I find the most vital problem is education in all of its phases.

"To promote physical education, the clubs are encouraging medical inspection and luncheons in the schools, child welfare, by the endorsement of the Ellis health law, which provides for a visiting nurse and by co-operation with the public welfare board which was created at the request of the federation.

To Further Education.

"To further education the women are concentrating upon rural schools. One club alone sponsors forty-eight schools, sixteen of which are negro institutions, four foreign schools, one maintains a mountain school where 108 children are taught. The federation has a student aid foundation, a loan fund of $18,000 which is loaned without interest, and also scholarships in every reputable school in the state.

"Our newly-passed compulsory attendance law is being enforced and the Elders-Carswell amendment and Smith-Towner bill are strongly advocated.

"Through the efforts of the club women, the oldest chartered state university in the United States has just opened its doors to women and we shall see the state president dedicated the first woman's building on the campus of the Georgia State university.

Capacity for work, our government did not hesitate to call upon its women power for all kinds of help during the war.

Women bravely gave their sons and husbands as the Spartan woman gave hers.

"For the knightliest battles that ever were fought were fought by the mothers of men. No banners that gleam and wave. But their battles, oh! how they last From babyhood to the grave!

"May this building dedicated to the higher education of women stand as immovable as the foundations of yonder foothills, as the influence which she enters here will be immovable as this location; may they imbibe something of the culture and the refinement of this classic City of Athens and their wives will be as worthy of the trust.

"But the greatest service and sacrifice was that of the mothers and wives of them, but should they unite I will not do no show, but they will have the admiration of all the world.

"With all this effort, we must give a long pull, a strong pull altogether. In Georgia the man who conducts visitors to the general office of the state, to such an extent that this

THE female of the species is at last evolving from her state of partial freedom and as a natural consequence, this is a sensible age. Girls and women have never been more normal, more sane or more sensible.

The out-of-doors is theirs to enjoy in sportsmanlike manner. Indeed, the modern girl shows as much real seriousness in her sports as she does in her home and in her business, and even a bit more than Granny exhibited over her fancy embroidery.

Given the out-of-doors and the opportunity to enter sports with real earnestness, Miss Modern has gone a step farther this year, thus not only signing up for summer sports herself, but also signing up trousers for entering her outdoor activities with her.

Sensible? Immensely. If girls ride in them, why shouldn't they play tennis in them? Truly, skirts often make one "miss a ball and hit a fall." When worn with a colorful sports overblouse of Jap crepe, there is the picture of a 'suitably trig costume.'

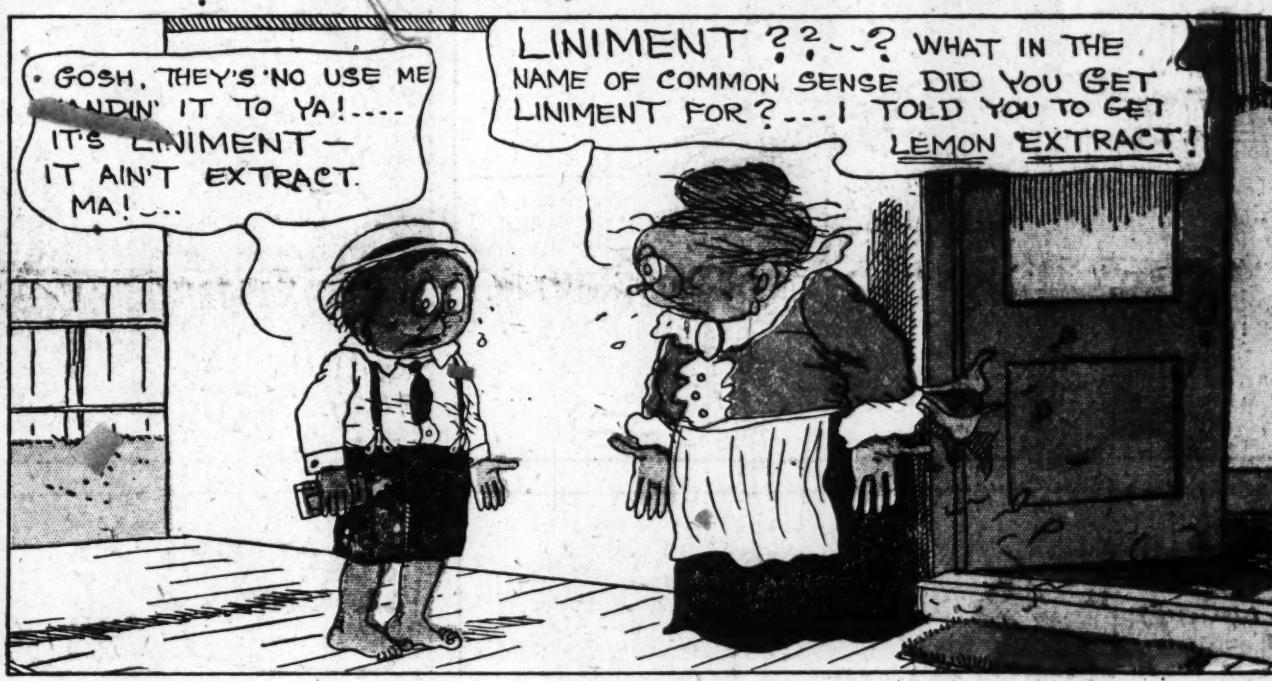

As for fishing, a tailored blouse of sufficiently subdued color not to rouse the suspicions of the fish is desirable. One should choose only such colors for one's blouse, hat, trousers and boots as the fish are accustomed to seeing about their aquatic homes. True, the fisher-lady above has chosen a bright orange tie and a hat band to match, but the hat band is invisible above the broad brim, and the tie is easily removed once she begins to wade the stream.

Does Milady canoe? Then she dons a pair of trousers. She can have them made in whatever color she has chosen for her sweater and hat. A very smart rig consists of a green hat with green-trimmed sweater, green trousers, and golf stockings to match.

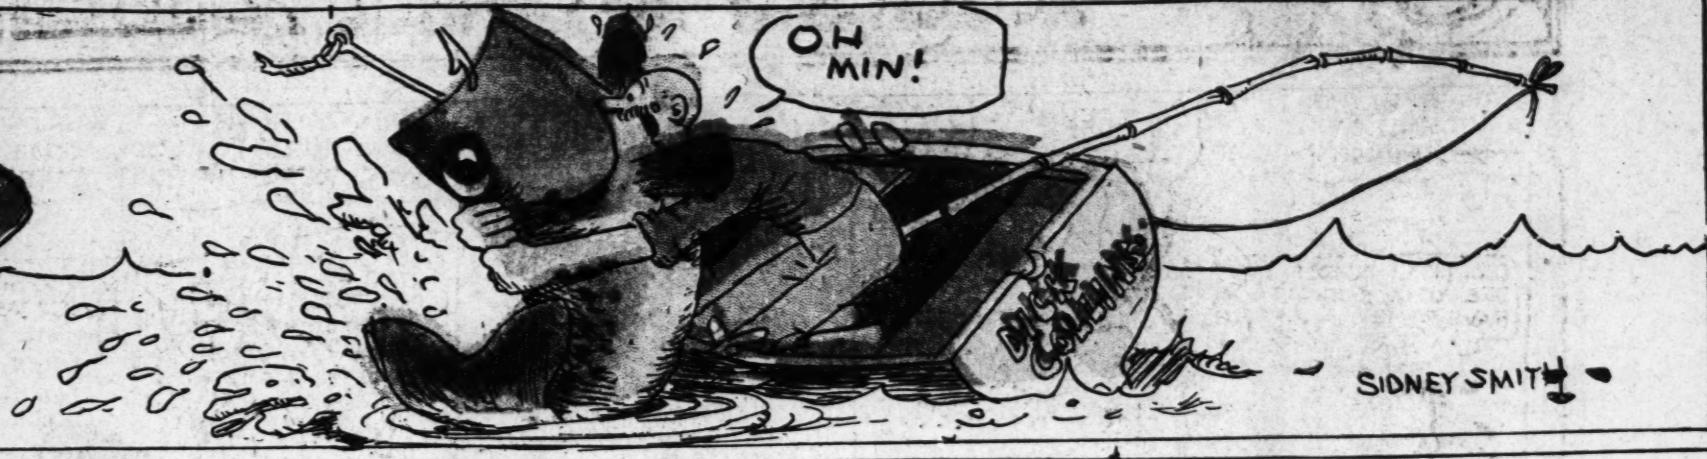

With this season's large repertoire of blouses, sweaters, hats, stockings and shoes, the sports girl has little trouble in assembling a costume which depends for its colorfulness and smart trimness upon the above accessories and for its comfort and practicality upon a pair of matching trousers which really are made over the same pattern as her riding trousers.
